The Challenges Facing the ICC: The Africa Question

Time: 4:30pm

Location: Silverman 240A

The International Criminal Court (ICC) has been criticized for what is deemed to be “selective” targeting of poor, African, or “third world” states. Is this a legitimate criticism?

The work of the ICC in Africa has provoked a number of questions. What impact has the ICC had on conflict resolution, peacebuilding, the rule of law, and the struggle to end impunity? Does ICC’s retributive justice model work in the case of Africa?

Bok Visiting Professor, Akua Kuenyehia is former Judge of the International Criminal Court; and the former Law Dean of University of Ghana. Ghana’s first female professor of law, Kuenyehia is an expert in gender and the law, public international law, and human rights. She is visiting Penn Law to teach a 3-week course on ‘The ICC from the Perspective of an Appellate Judge.’

Program co-sponsored by International Programs and Africana Studies
