The University of Pennsylvania does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, sex, sexual or affectional preference, age, religion, national or ethnic origin, or physical handicap. The University's policy applies to faculty and other employees, applicants for faculty positions and other employment, students and applicants for educational programs.
From the Dean

The year 1990 marks the 200th anniversary of formal legal education at the University of Pennsylvania. As generations of Penn students have been reminded, the study of law at Penn officially began with a series of lectures on law delivered in 1790 and 1791 by James Wilson, signer of the Declaration of Independence, architect of the Federal Constitution, and founding member of the United States Supreme Court.

As we prepare to celebrate the bicentennial of the Wilson Lectures, I approach the end of my first year as Dean. In this issue of The Law Alumni Journal we reflect on the 200-year history of legal education at Penn, while chronicling the many exciting developments of the past year.

As a newcomer to Penn just eight months ago, I was struck by the powerful confluence of tradition and change. One immediately senses the history of this institution — in the darkening portraits that hang on its walls, in the memorial plaques that commemorate its benefactors’ many contributions, in the rich legacy of its faculty’s writings and record of its graduates’ achievements, even in the stubborn and quirky customs that lurk in the Law School’s unwritten folkways to trip up unsuspecting administrators.

Yet that sense of tradition mingles with a spirit of innovation and energy truly remarkable for an institution about to enter its third century. One sees signs of change everywhere. Three-quarters of the present faculty have come to Penn within the past ten years. The upperclass curriculum has blossomed into an extravagant array of advanced electives, seminars, clinics, and skills courses. Even while it awaits the construction of a new home, Biddle Law Library continues at a dizzying pace to expand the range of information that it stores and the technologies used to access it.

The highlights of this past year illustrate these twin themes of continuity and change. In September, as a result of an unexpected surge of popularity, we enrolled the largest first-year class in the history of Penn Law. Even so, the entering class of 281 would seem small by the standards of many schools, and the addition of a third section helped preserve a sense of community among first-year students for which Penn is well known. Throughout the year, the Admissions Committee struggled to stay ahead of the rising tide of applications that threatened to flood the mail room.

The October kickoff of the Law School’s $45 million Campaign (part of the University’s $1 billion Campaign) focused the attention of the entire community on the School’s ambitious plans and aspirations. The centerpiece of the Campaign, a plan to construct a new library building and renovate Lewis Hall, moved closer to reality with approval of the financing plan and the siting plan, continued progress toward the fundraising goal, and completion of the initial design phase.

The Law School took several steps to reaffirm its longstanding commitment to the ideal of law as a public service profession. After a lengthy search, we appointed Judith Bernstein-Baker, a prominent advocate of children’s rights in Philadelphia, as the first Director of the Law School’s new Public Service Program. The faculty revised the Freedom of Career Choice Loan Forgiveness Program in such a way as to reduce further the economic barriers faced by our graduates who wish to accept positions in government or public service. The Center on Professionalism further enhanced its national reputation as a laboratory for the development of innovative materials for the teaching of legal ethics and professional responsibility.

Recent investments in faculty research yielded a bumper crop of faculty publications, on topics ranging from individual bankruptcy, freedom of speech, statutory interpretation, and public housing. New arrivals, Michael Moore, Leon Meltzer Professor of Law, Heidi Hurt, Assistant Professor of Law, and Visiting Professors Karen Burke, Jonathan Charney, Patrick Gudridge, Richard Singer, and Barry Zaretsky have added immeasurably to the intellectual life of the School.

In countless meetings and gatherings with alumni, I have been reminded of the strength of the bonds that tie this Law School to its former students. As I have often said, the true measure of any academic institution is the contributions made by its graduates to their communities. By that measure, Penn has a truly enviable record that inspires all of us to bring about an even brighter future.

Colin S. Diver
The Law School is pleased to announce that Judith Bernstein-Baker has been named the first Director of the Law School's Public Service Program. The novel Program, detailed at page 10, requires students to perform unpaid public service legal work as a condition of graduation.

Bernstein-Baker is a public service attorney and former social worker. A graduate of Temple University School of Law, Bernstein-Baker also holds a Master of Social Work degree from Penn's School of Social Work. She comes to the Law School after serving as staff attorney at the Support Center for Child Advocates in Philadelphia. Prior to obtaining her law degree, Bernstein-Baker worked for many years as a social worker and paralegal at Community Legal Services. Her experience also includes student supervision at LaSalle University's Urban Studies Center. Her skill in both legal service and social service make Bernstein-Baker particularly suited to instituting the Law School's ambitious new program.

An addition to the Development Office staff is Sylvia B. Blume, newly appointed as Major Gifts Officer at the Law School. Blume joins the Law School after serving as Director of Development at the University of Pennsylvania Graduate School of Fine Arts. Blume holds a B.A. from Penn and an M.A. degree from Temple University.

EVENTS

On May 8, 1990, the Law School opened an exhibit of the papers of the Honorable Raymond Pace Alexander and Sadie T. M. Alexander, '27. Sadie Alexander — the first black woman to receive a Ph.D. (in economics), to graduate from Penn Law School and to practice at the bar of Pennsylvania — lived a life of extraordinary accomplishment. She served on many Presidential commissions, was active in the National Urban League and the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia, and was the first black woman to serve as President of the Philadelphia Bar Foundation. Her husband Raymond Alexander, a Harvard Law graduate, served on the Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas for many years. Their leadership within the legal and African-American communities is a vital part of Philadelphia and national history.

This important exhibit of the Alexander Papers, donated to the University of Pennsylvania, is installed in the Law School's Great Hall. All are invited to peruse this historic exhibit.
The University celebrated its 250th Anniversary with an impressive array of events, including fireworks displays, an address by Ronald Reagan, and a presentation by Nobel Peace Prize winner Oscar Arias Sanchez. Law School faculty and alumni participated in a variety of seminars and discussions on topics as diverse as "Court Reform: What Makes for Success", "Can the Ivy League Compete in the NCAA?" and "Risks and Returns of Real Estate Investment". Alumni who participated in these exchanges include Sylvan M. Cohen, '38, Edward S.G. Dennis, Jr., '73, Practice Professor of Law Douglas N. Frenkel, '72, John G. Harkins, '58, Leon Meltzer Professor of Law Emeritus A. Leo Levin, '42, Jordan Luke, '72, Edward F. Mannino, '66, Peter H. Pfund, '59, Algernon Sydney Biddle Professor of Law Curtis R. Reitz, '56, The Honorable Nonna L. Shapiro, '51, and Myles J. llmenbaum, '57. The Law School also hosted a reception on May 19 in conjunction with the University's celebration.

Ten quinquennial classes held reunion events during May. The Class of 1940 celebrated its 50th Reunion with a lunch with Dean Diver at the Law School, a formal dinner, and brunch at the home of Reunion Celebration Chair Robert Sayre and his wife Lucy.

The Class of '35, led by J. Pennington Strauss, enjoyed its celebration of fifty-five years at the bar with a formal dinner in Philadelphia. Events were also held by the Classes of '50, chaired by the Honorable Melvin G. Levy; '55, chaired by Norman Zarwin; '60, chaired by Richard Rivers; '65, chaired by Joseph J. Connolly; '70, chaired by William Dimeling; '75, chaired by William Stevens; '80, chaired by Kristin R. Hayes; and '85, chaired by Lynn Herbert. Look for photos from these celebrations in the Annual Giving Report, to be published next fall.

A group of thirty international LL.M. candidates traveled to Washington D.C. in March. There, they visited U.S. Representative William Gray's office, had lunch at the United States Supreme Court, and heard two arguments before the Court in its afternoon session. They also met with Marci A. Hamilton, '88, clerk to Justice Sandra Day O'Connor. To round out the students' trip, First Vice-President of the Law Alumni Society John F. DePodesta, '69, assisted by Robert S. Natalini, '86, hosted the group at the Washington office of Pepper, Hamilton and Scheetz, where they discussed issues in international law.

LL.M. candidates meet with alumni at the Washington offices of Pepper, Hamilton and Scheetz - Shubur Grewal (India), Didier Goudant (France), Catherine Queuleu (France), Juan Uribe (Columbia), Robert S. Keating, Former US Ambassador to Madagascar and Comoros, John F. DePodesta, '69, Xouassi Amoussouga (Togo)
ANNUAL GIVING

A different twist in the Annual Giving's Phonathon strategy proved to be quite successful. Instead of scheduling two two-day phonathons during the fall and spring as done in the past, Jeff Stopford, '69, National Chairman, suggested three one-day phonathons. The three phonathons scheduled in November, March and May raised over $75,000 from 300 alumni. Jeff hailed the events as substantive stepping stones to the $1.55 million goal for 1989-90, and also as a vehicle for raising the awareness of the importance of Annual Giving, especially during the 5-year Campaign. He praised the enthusiasm of the alumni as a key ingredient in this year's success.

CONFERENCES AND SEMINARS

The Second Annual Sadie T. M. Alexander Conference was sponsored by the Black Law Students Association March 30-31, 1990. This year's conference, entitled "A Legal Agenda for the 1990's: Where Do We Go From Here?" presented seminars and panel discussions on topics such as "Amandla! Power and Politics in the 1990's" and "Civil Rights: New Directions and Changing Strategies". Alumni who served as panelists and speakers include Pennsylvania Supreme Court Chief Justice Robert N.C. Nix, Jr., '53, Philadelphia Councilman George R. Burrell, Jr., '74, Stephanie Franklin-Suber, '82, Reginald Govans, '78, and Pennsylvania State Senator Hardy Williams, '57.

The same weekend, participants joined the Ninth Annual Edward V. Sparer Public Interest Law Conference. Penn Law graduates Sharon Dietrich, '84, Lewis Maltby, '72, and Beth Olanoff, '80 joined other panelists to explore issues such as "OSHA and the Right to Know", "Employment at Will: The Changing Status of Non-Union Workers", and "The Future of Affirmative Action".

In April, Bernard G. Segal Professor of Law and Dean Colin S. Diver moderated a panel discussion on Tort Reform during a day-long roundtable sponsored by the Institute for Law and Economics. The program featured distinguished faculty from various national law schools.

LOAN FORGIVENESS PROGRAM

In 1986, the Law School adopted a Loan Forgiveness Program, permitting interest free loans and grants to graduates who undertake employment in public interest positions. The Freedom of Career Choice Committee, chaired by Professor Susan Sturm, has expanded the definition of "public interest" to include government employment. The committee voted to adopt a broad definition of eligible employment to promote greater participation in the program as well as greater career diversity.

LECTURES AND DISCUSSION

Martin Arias, Class of 1992 and son of the Panamanian Vice-President, and Carlos Barsallo, LL.M. candidate, presented “Liberation or Invasion? The Real Story from Panama” to the Law School community. The students’ well-attended talk advanced a Panamanian perspective on recent events in their homeland.

Assistant Professor of Law Edward B. Rock, '83 discussed his recent article, Antitrust and the Market for Corporate Control, with students at a brown bag lunch. The article, recently published in the California Law Review, suggests the appropriateness of applying antitrust principles to the market for corporate control.

Dr. Richard Lonsdorf, Lecturer in Law, arranged for the Law School Community to view “Near Death” in February. This important documentary examines the difficult decisions and problems faced by families and medical personnel dealing with terminal patients.

Visiting Professor of Talmudic Civil Law Haym Soloveitchik presented the third public lectures in the Caroline Zelenik Gruss and Joseph S. Gruss Lecture Series in March and April. Professor Soloveitchik presented “Maimonides - Accomplishments and Problems” and “Status of the Facilitator in Jewish Law”.

Irving R. Segal Lectureship in Trial Advocacy

On February 15, 1990, the Law School was pleased to host the distinguished Shirley Mount Hufstedler — lawyer, jurist, law professor, and the first United States Secretary of Education — to present the Sixth Irving R. Segal Lecture in Trial Advocacy. In welcoming remarks to a standing-room-only audience at the Law School, Dean Colin S. Diver described Mrs. Hufstedler as “a fine example of our many professions.”
Indeed, Mrs. Hufstedler's career exemplifies the diversity of service made possible by a legal education. After graduating tenth in her class at Stanford Law School in 1949, Mrs. Hufstedler served on the state courts of California. In 1968, President Lyndon B. Johnson appointed Mrs. Hufstedler to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, making her then the highest ranking female jurist on the Federal bench.

In 1979, President Jimmy Carter appointed Mrs. Hufstedler the first United States Secretary of Education. Since leaving that post in 1981, she has maintained a formidable schedule as a practicing attorney, a visiting professor of law, and an active member of the Board of Trustees of numerous corporations, non-profits, and policy-making institutions, including the Salzburg Seminar. Indeed, Mrs. Hufstedler came to Philadelphia directly from Costa Rica, where she was involved on a fact-finding mission for the MacArthur Foundation.

Mrs. Hufstedler began her presentation, entitled "What You Need to Know That Law School Does Not Teach You", with a comment on the age-old lament of alumni that, in our day, "law school was better and a lot harder than it is today." In Hufstedler's opinion, however, the great law schools like Penn are even greater today. They superbly expose students to the historical basis of law, and thoroughly train law students to think like lawyers. Where many fail, in Hufstedler's view, is in training lawyers to think in successful ways about the increasingly complex issues facing modern society.

Noting that "many of the issues we now confront have no historical antecedent", Hufstedler stated that the precedential basis of the common law is becoming in some ways irrelevant. Hufstedler postulated that advances in bio-medicine, industry and technology require that lawyers — who take on an extraordinary percentage of roles of societal influence such as legislators, executives and of course judges — not only understand the complexity of these issues but also have a framework to objectively examine the various philosophical and moral views surrounding them. Hufstedler argued that in order to avoid producing numbers of legal historians rather than modern day practitioners, legal education must provide an interdisciplinary exposure.

Hufstedler's proposal is that the third year of law school be dedicated to an interdisciplinary curriculum. To encourage truly interdisciplinary thought, Hufstedler's suggestion is that this curriculum not be team-taught in a way that would allow academicians to stay involved only in their own disciplines. Rather, Hufstedler envisions faculty involvement in the actual learning process, joining students in the interdisciplinary classroom. This broad exposure of legal thinkers to the substance of the complex issues of our time would, in Hufstedler's view, create a framework to ensure more productive and useful law and decision making in the future.

Of course, a legal education at Penn Law is in many ways interdisciplinary. An increasing number of the faculty are joint J.D./Ph.D. holders. The Institute for Law and Economics presents continuing programs exploring economic disciplines as related to law. Professors hold joint appointments in the Medical School, the graduate group in Public Policy Analysis of the Wharton School, the Department of Finance, the Department of Economics, and the School of Social Work. Additionally, students are able to enroll in joint degree programs not only in Law and Economics and Law and Graduate Business, but also in Law and City Planning, Law and Islamic Studies, and Law and Public Policy and Management.

Mrs. Hufstedler's interesting and well-attended presentation was part of the ongoing Irving R. Segal Lectureship in Trial Advocacy. This program is funded by an endowment created to honor Irving R. "Buddy" Segal, L'38, one of the Law School's most accomplished graduates. The series presents two distinguished speakers each academic year. For information about Segal Lectures in the coming academic year, contact the Alumni Affairs Office.
Increasingly in today's complex legal environment, lawyers are wrestling with important issues in professional responsibility. The public perception of attorneys, burgeoning competitiveness, the growth of the mega-firm, professional dissatisfaction — all contribute to a heightened awareness of issues in ethics and responsibility.

The Center on Professionalism, instituted at the University of Pennsylvania Law School in the fall of 1987, is intimately involved in the inspection and analysis of issues in professional responsibility. The Center's unique mission is to foster real scholarship concerning legal ethics and the legal profession. From this scholarship — begun by Center Director Edmund B. Spaeth, Jr., Senior Fellow at the Law School and Former President Judge of the Pennsylvania Superior Court, and Former Dean Robert H. Mundheim, who have been joined by faculty members Douglas N. Frenkel, Practice Professor of Law; Lani Guinier, Associate Professor of Law; Howard Lesnick, Professor of Law; and Curtis R. Reitz, Algernon Sydney Biddle Professor of Law — has been developed a distinctive approach to presenting and teaching issues in professional responsibility. Through the Center's work, students at the Law School and members of the practicing bar alike are able to engage in sophisticated and active discussion of issues in ethics and responsibility.

Dean Colin S. Diver is committed to the Center's work. "A law school must expose students to a broad view of the legal system. A good legal education of necessity provides not only the tools to 'think like a lawyer', but also a framework for defining one's own professional role and obligation. The scholarship at the Center on Professionalism supports this framework by stimulating continuing dialogue on legal ethics and social responsibility throughout our profession."

Work at the Center has resulted in two unique curricular programs at the Law School. The first-year course in Professional Responsibility and the Public Service Program, both detailed below, are significant and distinctive efforts to provide students with a broad view of the law. The experience of the Center faculty and staff has uniformly supported the importance of exposing members of the practicing bar to these same issues in responsibility. As the Center's work continues, its scholarship and programs will not only enhance the legal education of students at the University of Pennsylvania Law School, but will also heighten the dialogue on professionalism in the bar, at the bench and in academia.
Pioneering new methodology for teaching professional responsibility

One of the central premises at the Center on Professionalism is that sound instruction in principles of professional responsibility prepares students to think about the intricate ethical issues they will face as practicing lawyers. Accordingly, one of the Center’s principal tasks is developing and teaching a distinctive new course in professional responsibility.

The course is novel both in form and content. For a two week period following winter break, first-year students engage in an intensive course dealing solely with professional responsibility issues. In addition to the traditional techniques of introducing the rules of professional conduct to the students, the course presents ethical issues in an active manner, requiring students to participate in video presentations, small discussion groups, role playing and mock arguments.

The course is also unique in that it is taught not only by Center faculty and professional staff, but with full involvement of members of the practicing bar and of the bench. To ensure a realistic and practical presentation of issues, the curriculum is devised in consultation with attorneys from all types of legal environments. Moreover, attorneys participate in the teaching of the course, presenting issues to students and working with small groups to hash out the various scenarios presented.

The Law School has found the process to be quite rewarding. The curriculum allows law students, early in their career, to give serious thought to what sort of lawyer they want to be. The course has led to the development of upper level courses in specialized areas of professional responsibility, and the interest of other law schools has encouraged the Center to consider publishing its curriculum.

An additional, and substantial, benefit of the course has been its impact on the practicing attorneys involved in its formation and presentation. Attorneys involved in teaching the course have uniformly praised the rigorous and involving techniques pioneered by the Center. Their involvement in the program has proved to be a vital learning experience for them, despite their role as “teacher” of the material.

Former Dean Robert H. Mundheim, actively involved in the initiation of the new methodology in the first year course, is not surprised. “We are all students, practicing lawyers and people in law school. A technique that works in exciting the interest and participation of law students will typically also work with practicing lawyers, indeed, practicing lawyers of any age.”

PROFESSIONALISM

Beth Olanoff, '80, of Hangley Connolly Epstein Chicco Foxman and Ewing, agrees. Her involvement as a lecturer in the first-year program led her “very impressed” with the active teaching methods. “It is certainly worthwhile for law students to be exposed to these issues. But these teaching techniques are perhaps even more valuable for lawyers, for whom these issues have taken shape and become real.”

This interest of lawyers in the curriculum led the Center on Professionalism to explore the use of its teaching materials and methods specifically with members of the practicing bar. Caroline Simon, Esq., Executive Director of the Center, worked with Center Staff Members Janet G. Perry, Esq., and Eleanor W. Myers, '75, to design a series of multi-media case studies on ethical issues for use by attorneys in their in-house professional education programs. Perry and Myers work closely with members of the bar to devise a realistic script in which to present true-to-life scenarios for the identification, examination, and analysis of ethical problems.

In February of 1990, the Center began publishing these studies, entitled “Professional Responsibility for Lawyers: A Guided Course,” in conjunction with Commerce Clearing House, Inc. Each handsome package includes a case study raising ethical issues in a narrative form, a videotaped dramatizing the case study, a detailed analysis of the issues for use by the discussion leader, and materials for participants. The program is designed to allow participants to view a hypothetical situation on tape, discuss its implications, and return to the tape to follow through on the hypothetical. Three programs per year will be produced, each dealing with varying problems and situations.

To date, case studies developed present professional responsibility issues in corporate counseling, conflicts of interest, confidentiality, the supervision of subordinates, and pretrial litigation and advocacy tactics. The Center is also planning programs dealing with specialty areas of the law, such as real estate, tax, trusts and estates, and problems distinctive to in-house lawyers as well as to non-lawyer support staff.

The Honorable Edmund B. Spaeth, Senior Fellow at the Law School and Director of the Center, explains the importance of the Center’s unique program. “The materials allow us to reach out to the profession, which is now wrestling with problems of professional responsibility as never before. Lawyers are realizing that we can’t solve all problems by rules, which may be ambiguous or fail in situations for which they were not tailored. Our programs are distinctive in that they require the lawyer to go beyond the rules, to ask first what do the rules require, but then to continue the inquiry — what is the professional thing to do?”

The programs, which Center staff have taught to ABA groups, law firms, corporate legal departments, faculties of other law schools, have been widely praised. Lawrence J. Fox, '68, a partner with Drinker Biddle & Reath in Philadelphia, presented two of the case studies to members of his firm, with very positive response. “The programs present in a graphic way some of the important problems facing our profession,” noted Fox. “I think the process — videotape, discussion, return to the videotape — is a particularly helpful method. The COP programs make it a lot easier to teach some very hard material.”

Further information about the Center’s programs and how you can take advantage of these materials can be obtained from Caroline Simon, Esq., Executive Director of the Center on Professionalism. Simon can be reached at (215) 898-9812.

The broad inquiry and scholarship enabled by the Center on Professionalism is leading to exciting and dynamic programs for members of the bar. Penn’s commitment to exploring these areas is bound to have important and vital repercussions for our profession and beyond.

The Public Interest Program: Engaging students in the process of service

A second dynamic addition to the Law School’s curriculum is the newly instituted Public Service Program. The Program will place hundreds of students in positions of unpaid legal service, greatly facilitating the pro bono and public service commitment of the practicing bar. The ambitious program has been attracting widespread national attention, receiving favorable comment in both the New York Times (see, eg., May 19, 1989) and the Wall Street Journal (see, eg., May 22, 1989).

Professor of Law Howard Lesnick, a member of the Center on Professionalism faculty, first proposed the adoption of a service requirement, describing its central purpose as curricular in nature. Acknowledging the premise that responsible legal practitioners devote energy to pro bono activities, the Public Service Program builds this expectation into the law student’s view of practice. Lawyers who perform this service during their legal studies will have first-hand experience not only of the need for pro bono work but also of how to create time for the work in their demanding professional lives. Thus, the notion that one is both a citizen and an attorney, regardless of the legal work environment chosen, is presented to the lawyer while he or she is still a student.

The need for members of the bar to engage in pro bono and community service work is increasing daily, making the timeliness of the Program quite apparent. Judith Bernstein-Baker, newly appointed as the first Director of the Public Service Program (Bernstein-Baker is profiled at Symposium, p. 2), is familiar with the growing need for attorneys to fulfill their public service commitments. She notes that the resources of organizations traditionally mandated to serve the public or those with limited access to the legal system have decreased while the need for these services has continued to grow. Student efforts through the Program will help ensure the legal representation of individuals and groups who may not otherwise have access to legal help. In addition, students will assist overburdened public systems, such as governmental agencies.

While serving these ambitious and important goals, the Public Service Program is at the same time beneficial to members of the bar. First, the commitment of attorneys to community service is facilitated by the availability of a student assistant. For those attorneys engaged in pro bono work, the Program can be of direct assistance — the “extra pair of hands” provided by the student can be of great assistance in serving the client. Attorneys employed at public service groups, governmental entities or other organizations meeting the qualifications for placement (delineated below) can directly avail themselves of a student worker. For those firms and practitioners looking at ways to reaffirm and expand their participation in public service, the knowledge that student assistance is available can positively affect policy making on this important issue.

At the same time, those attorneys working with a student can benefit in the knowledge that they are actively engaged in the valuable task of training the next generation of practitioners. Attorneys will have the opportunity to act as mentors to students at this critical point in their professional lives. The Program may also have some unintended long term benefits to practitioners — lawyer/student placements may lead to professional placements or career choices as well.

As she begins to develop the Public Service Program, Bernstein-Baker looks forward to hearing from alumni/ae and other practitioners. Members of the Class of 1992 will begin to work in the Program this fall, and will be joined by members of the Class of 1993 the following academic year. Preliminary interest in the Program has been strong. A wide variety of civic organizations, governmental entities, public interest groups, civil liberties organizations and non-profit groups have contacted the Public Service Office with inquiries about student placements.

Judith Bernstein-Baker, Director of the dynamic new Public Interest Program, welcomes the interest of alumni as the program gets underway

In thinking about how you and/or your firm or practice might best utilize the Public Service Program, keep in mind the breadth of the Program’s scope. Students can assist in any non-clerical and law-related tasks performed for traditional pro bono clients — i.e., those not adequately represented by the private sector or by government — as well as for governmental employers, non-profit employers, community groups and civic organizations. Upon receiving a request for assistance, the Public Service Office will circulate the placement opportunity to eligible students. Every effort will be made to match a student’s interest with the assignment. The attorney will then utilize the student’s skills as is appropriate, and will complete a brief report on the quality and quantity of the student’s work at the conclusion of the project.

Any questions you might have regarding the Program should be directed to Judith Bernstein-Baker at (215) 898-0459. Both requests for assistance from students and offers to mentor students in placements are most welcome. While of course the students will be physically based in Philadelphia, inquiries from all alumni are welcome. Advances in communication technology may permit long-distance projects, particularly those that are research oriented.

The Law School’s commitment to exposing students to the world of service, while at the same time better enabling lawyers to meet their responsibility to perform public interest legal work, is a strong example of the Center on Professionalism’s commitment to continuing exploration of the profession.
In 1990, the University of Pennsylvania celebrates its 250th anniversary. It was in 1740 that plans were begun "to erect a large Building for a Charity School for the instruction of Poor Children." Classes in the building started in 1751, after Benjamin Franklin published "Proposals Relating to the Education of Youth in Pensilvania."

The school was up and running by 1790, the year of Franklin's death. That same year, the college appointed a professor of law to the faculty. James Wilson, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, accepted that appointment in August, 1790. At the two hundredth anniversary of Wilson's appointment, the University of Pennsylvania Law School salutes its history.
James Wilson is elected the first professor of law at the College — and in the nation. In December, he delivers his first lecture. Present in the audience are President George Washington, Vice President John Adams, and members of both Houses of Congress. The classes in law, however, soon lapse.

The Philadelphia Law Association petitions the Trustees of the University for the reestablishment of the professorship of law.

The Honorable George Sharswood, a judge of the Philadelphia District Court, is appointed professor of law. He begins organization of a School of Law in the proprietary model, with faculty renting space from the college, students paying for tickets that would admit them to class, and professors holding partnership interests in the school's profits. Classes in law begin in the fall.

The Bachelor of Laws degree is awarded to thirty members of the first graduating class.

The Courts of Philadelphia issue a ruling that the Law School course may be substituted for two of the three years of clerkship with a practicing attorney required for Bar admission. Enrollment at the School soars.

The Law Alumni Society is founded.

Caroline Burnham Kilgore, who had earlier earned an M.D. degree in New York State, applies for admission to the Law School. She is denied, and begins the study of law privately.

Carrie Kilgore is denied admission to the Bar on the grounds that there was "no precedent for examination of a woman to the Bar" in Pennsylvania.

Carrie Burnham Kilgore, the first woman to receive a Penn law degree and to practice at the bar in Pennsylvania.
An architect's 1899 rendering of the new building to be constructed at 34th and Chestnut Streets in West Philadelphia.

The completed structure was dedicated in 1900 and named after William Draper Lewis, the Law School's first full-time faculty member.

Students dressed for their parts in a Mock Trial, 1908.

Sadie T. M. Alexander, '27, the first black woman graduate of the Law School, lived a life of service and accomplishment. Her father, Aaron A. Mossell, was the School's first black graduate, receiving his degree with the Class of 1888.

Sadie Tanner Mossell Alexander graduates from the Law School, becoming the first black woman to earn her degree at Penn Law. Alexander, who had earlier earned a Ph.D. from the Graduate School at Penn, went on to extraordinary accomplishments, including service on President Truman's Committee on Human Rights.

The Courts of Philadelphia rule that a graduate of the Law School may be admitted to the Bar without any clerkship requirement. The Law School thus supersedes the traditional apprenticeship system as the dominant form of legal education.

The Law School considers Kilgore's reapplication, and admits Kilgore to the Class of 1883. The Law School's admission of a woman preceded like admissions at Yale by 35 years, Columbia by no less than 44 years, and Harvard by a full 67 years. Upon her graduation in 1883, Kilgore is the first woman to practice law before the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

The Law School course is extended to three years. The Biddle Law Library is organized, and opens in December.

The proprietary school comes to an end. The Law School's administration is taken under the aegis of the Provost and Trustees of the University of Pennsylvania.

William Draper Lewis is named Dean. As the first full-time faculty member of the Law School, Lewis introduces the modern scholarly ideal of legal education.

The Law School moves to the West Philadelphia campus of the University. The School's new quarters, at 34th and Chestnut Streets, bear Lewis' name.

For the first time, the Law School requires an undergraduate degree for admission. Penn Law is among the first in the nation to establish this rigorous standard.
Penn Law graduate Owen J. Roberts, Class of 1898, is appointed Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court. To date, he is the sole Penn graduate to serve on the High Court.

During the Second World War, classes at the Law School are drastically reduced. The Class of 1945 graduates nine members, four of whom are women.

Jefferson Barnes Fordham is appointed Dean. He serves the Law School in this capacity for eighteen years, during which time is accomplished the building of the Law School dormitories and dining facility (1959), the administrative office and classroom wings (1962), and the renovation of all six floors of Lewis Hall (1969).

The Law School establishes an Honorary Fellowship, awarded to a lawyer who has combined an active professional career with outstanding public service. The Fellowship, awarded at Commencement, has honored distinguished attorneys such as Ralph Nader (1967), Marian Wright Edelman (1969), Margaret A. Burnham (1984), and Morris S. Dees, Jr. (1988).

The Law School continues to expand in diversity, with 53 electives available for selection by second and third year students. By the 1989-90 academic year, this number has increased by 50%, with 75 electives available in the rich curriculum.

The Clinical Program begins operating as a self-sustaining course, taking clients in-house and providing students with first-hand experience of law practice.

The Law School faculty adopts the Public Service requirement for graduation. Penn Law thus becomes the second law school in the nation, joining Tulane University School of Law, to require law-related public service as a condition of graduation.

The Law School launches a $45 million fund raising campaign as part of the University's $1 billion five year effort. The Campaign for Penn Law includes among its goals increased Annual Giving and endowment support plus funding for a new and modern space for the Biddle Library.
Stephen J. Cabot '67 was recently featured in a Legal Intelligencer (2/7/90) article. The article discussed Mr. Cabot's decision to join the New York law firm of Summit Rovins & Feldesman. A well-known Philadelphia attorney with a national reputation for his work in labor law, Mr. Cabot said that he chose to join the firm "because of both their national and international practice areas, and particularly, their strong labor and employment law department."

Harold Diamond '44 was the subject of a recent Philadelphia Lawyer (December 1989) article entitled "Not Disabled by His Handicap." Mr. Diamond, an attorney in Philadelphia's Olney section, is the only deaf lawyer in the United States in active practice. "The deaf are the largest group of handicapped but the least-recognized and least-helped," Diamond says. He has not been disabled by his handicap and feels enabled by his ability to read body language.

Honorable Bernard J. Goodheart '55 was recently featured in a Legal Intelligencer (2/15/90) article discussing his fifteen-year tradition of marrying couples in his courtroom on Valentine's Day. The Valentine's Day practice started because of his name, but over the years, Judge Goodheart says, he has become a judicial version of Cupid.

Randolph H. Hardock '81 was quoted in a recent issue of The Bond Buyer (2/15/90). Mr. Hardock, a tax aide to the Senate Finance Committee, reported that there is strong support among some members of the committee to resurrect the tax exemption for bonds to build sports stadiums and convention centers that was eliminated by the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

Clinical Faculty Member Harriet Katz was recently featured in a Legal Intelligencer (12/7/89) article about her part in founding the Women's Law Project. The Project was founded in 1974 by five women graduates of Yale Law School, including Professor Katz, to push the legislature and the courts into implementing the Pennsylvania Equal Rights Amendment. The Project's work on equally important issues continues today.

Herbert M. Linsenberg '51 was recently profiled in the Jewish Exponent (1/26/90) regarding his new appointment as President and chief executive officer of Eagle National Bank in Upper Darby, PA. Prior to his appointment, Mr. Linsenberg practiced law for almost 40 years and says "It's exciting to go through a career change at this stage in my life."

Edward F. Mannino '66 was recently featured in a Lawyer's Digest (February 1990) article describing his just published book entitled Lender Liability and Banking Litigation (Law Journal Seminars Press, 1990). Peer reviews by Richard Nassberg and Melvin Cantor laud the book as "far and away the most comprehensive treatise on banking litigation."

Honorable Robert N.C. Nix, Jr. '53, Chief Justice of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, was featured in a recent Legal Intelligencer article. The article discussed the recommendations of Justice Nix's 16-member task force concerning the plan to create a separate drug court and mandatory drug treatment programs in Philadelphia. Leon Meltzer Professor of Law Emeritus A. Leo Levin '42, head of the task force, was also quoted in the article: "If we're really going to fight a war against drugs, somebody's got to provide the bullets."

M. Kelley Tillery '79 was featured in a recent Lawyer's Digest (February 1990) article. Mr. Tillery, a partner in the Philadelphia law firm of Leonard, Tillery & Davison, has an interesting and unique practice. He is the attorney for authorized licensees of rock group merchandise. Mr. Tillery fights a continuous battle with bootleg T-shirt operations which can cost his clients millions of dollars a year in lost income. Mr. Tillery explained, "The amount of money involved in rock and roll merchandise is phenomenal."

Professor of Law Elizabeth Warren was quoted in an article in a recent issue of The Economist (2/24/90) entitled "A New Ending for Chapter 11." Professor Warren commented on the need to lessen the influence of bankers who push hard for a bankruptcy filing when a company gets into trouble.
Professor Gorman also participated in debates on natural law with Jeremy Waldron of Cornell and Richard Epstein of the University of Chicago at the Midwest Political Science Association in Chicago.

Professor Moore also participated in a debate on the concept of law. She also participated in a debate on "Scheving's Rules" at the University of San Diego Law School.

Former Dean and Bernard G. Segal Professor of Law Robert H. Mundheim has been elected vice chairman of the National Association of Securities Dealers (NASD). Dean Mundheim has also been elected co-chairman of the Fried, Frank, Harris, Shriver & Jacobson, a national law firm with offices in New York, Washington, D.C., Los Angeles, and London. Dean Mundheim chaired a day-long program on new SEC Rule 14A4 in London in March of 1990.

Assistant Professor of Law Edward B. Rock, '83 recently instructed the Court of Chancery and the Supreme Court of Delaware on some of the applications of the law and economics movement. The session paid particular attention to the implications of these techniques for corporation law.

Most recently, Professor Summers presented "Unions Without Majority: A Black Hole?" a Kenneth M. Piper Lecture at the University of Chicago-Kent Law School. Professor Summers also gave lectures on "Comparative Perspectives on Job Security," "Effective Remedies of Individual Employees," and "The Future of Labor Law."

Professor Wachter recently instructed the Court of Chancery and the Supreme Court of Delaware on some of the analytical approaches of the law and economics movement. The session paid particular attention to the implications of these techniques for corporation law.
