

March 23, 2017

After Cariou v. Prince: Recent Developments in Art Appropriation and Fair Use Law

Time: 12:00pm

Location: Silverman 240A

Please join Penn Law and the Arts for a presentation by Daniel J. Brooks, counsel to plaintiff Patrick Cariou in Cariou v. Prince, a recent landmark art appropriation and fair use case. Mr. Brooks will discuss his experience litigating the case as well as subsequent developments in art appropriation and fair use law since the Cariou decision. Lunch will be served!

Daniel J. Brooks is a graduate of Columbia College (B.A., 1968) and Yale Law School (J.D., 1973). He is a commercial litigator whose practice focuses on securities, copyright and employment litigation and arbitration. Mr. Brooks has first-chaired many trials and arbitrations and argued dozens of appeals in a wide array of substantive areas, including in the financial industry (representing financial institutions and financial industry professionals in matters ranging in scope from defending customer fraud claims, to broker compensation disputes, to employee raiding and contractual non-compete disputes, as well as claims of trading on insider information); in class action litigation (defending corporations, officers and directors against shareholder actions); and in intellectual property law. In the copyright area, Mr. Brooks recently represented the plaintiff in a leading art appropriation case which produced the definitive fair use decision of the past decade. He has written and lectured extensively on copyright law at several law schools and to bar association committees. Mr. Brooks has served on the New York City Bar Association Committees on Securities Regulation and Federal Courts. He is a member of the arbitration panel at the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA) and of the Commercial Panel at the American Arbitration Association. Mr. Brooks also serves on the Board of the National Institute for Reproductive Health Action Fund, an organization advocating for women's reproductive rights. He is frequently recognized as a New York Super Lawyer and New York Top Rated Lawyer. Prior to joining the firm, he was a partner for 12 years at Schnader Harrison Segal & Lewis and, prior to that, a founding partner of Layton Brooks & Hecht, a litigation boutique.

Contact Info:

Debbie Sands
debsands@law.upenn.edu