COP Presents: Alternate Dispute Resolution through the Lens of Native American Peacemaking

Time: 12:00pm - 12:45pm

Location: Tanenbaum 145

Thank you for your interest! Online registration has closed for this program.

Penn Law's Center on Professionalism is honored to welcome Shawn Watts, the associate director of the Edson Queiroz Foundation Mediation Program at Columbia Law School.

A Citizen of the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma, Watts developed and teaches a course in Native American Peacemaking, which is a traditional indigenous form of dispute resolution. Through interactive exercises, Shawn will demonstrate to students how dispute resolution through mediation differs from resolution through the courts. Students will learn how Native American communities have developed peace-making processes and how students can begin to think about those approaches as they counsel clients involved in conflict and disputes.

This session is part of "Penn Law Celebrates Native American Heritage Month." All Penn community members are welcome! A delicious lunch will be served.
