

EDITORIAL ANNOUNCEMENT:
JOURNAL OF COMPARATIVE BUSINESS AND CAPITAL MARKET LAW

With this volume, the Journal has a new name and a wider set of interests.

The international lawyer of today must deal with an increasing variety of business problems. In its first four volumes, the Journal has carried articles on securities regulation, corporation law and banking. We believe that our readers and contributors would appreciate the Journal's treating a more comprehensive set of subjects. With our new name and our broadened scope, as described on the inside of the front cover, we expect to address a greater number of problem areas of interest to the international practitioner and scholar.

We particularly invite the submission of articles on such subjects as trade regulation (anti-trust), transnational sales, technology licensing, trade with non-market economies, public and private finance, regional economic organizations, and like matters. We enlist our readers' aid in adding areas of particular interest to them.

Our coverage of securities regulation, corporation law, and banking will continue.

We appreciate the support and assistance of our Board of Advisory Editors. We will call on the members of the Board for advice in our expanded activity. We appreciate also the support of the University of Pennsylvania Law School, which is our editorial home, and of its Center for Study of Financial Institutions. With this volume, the Law School increases its support by providing us with a staff of student editors. The names of these second- and third-year law students are listed on the inside of the front cover. We welcome them to the Journal.
