

few weeks after its execution. Held, that upon these averments the testator cannot be regarded as having had, at the time, testamentary capacity: Id.

Competency of Testator.—Neither age nor weakness of intellect are sufficient to incapacitate a person to make a will. It must be an entire loss of intellect, so that the testator was unable to understand what he was doing, or the contents of the paper, when read to him: Crolius et al. v. Stark et al., 64 Barb.
