“Long Past Time”: CEDAW Ratification in the United States

Rangita de Silva de Alwis
University of Pennsylvania Law School

Amanda M. Martin
University of Pennsylvania

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarship.law.upenn.edu/faculty_scholarship

Part of the American Politics Commons, Civil Rights and Discrimination Commons, Family, Life Course, and Society Commons, Gender and Sexuality Commons, Human Rights Law Commons, Inequality and Stratification Commons, International Law Commons, Labor and Employment Law Commons, Law and Gender Commons, Law and Society Commons, Policy Design, Analysis, and Evaluation Commons, Public Law and Legal Theory Commons, Women's Studies Commons, and the Work, Economy and Organizations Commons

Repository Citation

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by Penn Law: Legal Scholarship Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in Faculty Scholarship at Penn Law by an authorized administrator of Penn Law: Legal Scholarship Repository. For more information, please contact PennlawIR@law.upenn.edu.
“LONG PAST TIME”:
CEDAW RATIFICATION IN THE UNITED STATES

Rangita de Silva de Alwis* and Amanda M. Martin

“[W]e will persist in our effort to persuade key members of the Senate— and they know who they are—that it is long past time for America to become party to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women.”

– Madeleine Albright ***

INTRODUCTION ......................................................................................................................... 16
I. A HISTORY OF THE CEDAW IN THE UNITED STATES........................................ 19
II. THE TRUMP ADMINISTRATION ON THE ADVANCEMENT OF WOMEN AND GENDER EQUALITY ........................................................................................................ 21
   A. Equal Pay for Equal Work ......................................................................................... 21
   B. Childcare .................................................................................................................... 22
   C. Parental Leave and Work/Family Reconciliation ..................................................... 24

* Rangita de Silva de Alwis is the Associate Dean of International Affairs at the University of Pennsylvania Law School and Global Advisor to the UN Sustainable Development Fund. Previously, she was the inaugural director of the Women in Public Service Project founded by Secretary of State Hillary Clinton.

 J.D., 2017, University of Pennsylvania Law School. Amanda Martin is an Associate at Milbank, Tweed, Hadley and McCloy, where she completed a pro bono fellowship at Her Justice, a non-profit that provides free legal services to women living in poverty in New York City.

 This article is dedicated to Madeleine Albright and Hillary Clinton, who have done more than any other female leaders to advance women’s human rights in the United States and around the world.
INTRODUCTION

The goal of the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) is to call upon States Parties to eliminate all forms of discrimination against women on the basis of sex. The CEDAW, considered the most comprehensive international agreements on the basic human rights of women, addresses women’s rights within political, civil, cultural, economic, and social life, and defines what constitutes discrimination against women, as well as ways to end such discrimination.1 The CEDAW defines discrimination against women as:

[A]ny distinction, exclusion or restriction made on the basis of sex which has the effect or purpose of impairing or nullifying the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by women, irrespective of their marital status, on a basis of equality of men and women, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural, civil or any other field.\(^2\)

The CEDAW provides a blueprint through a series of Articles that provide a standard-setting roadmap for states to eliminate discrimination against women and girls.

This international bill of rights for women is the landmark standard-setting international instrument to hold governments accountable for gender-based discrimination.\(^3\) The CEDAW is the first convention to comprehensively address women’s rights in the political, social, cultural, economic, and private spheres.\(^4\) Since its adoption in 1979, 189 countries have ratified the CEDAW, many of which have far less robust systems in place to ensure gender equality than the United States.\(^5\) However, the United States is conspicuously absent from the 186 States Parties to the CEDAW. The United States is one of only seven countries not to ratify the CEDAW. The six other countries that have not ratified the CEDAW are Iran, Sudan, South Sudan, Somalia, Palau, and Tonga.\(^6\) States Parties to the CEDAW are charged with implementing “appropriate measures” toward ending discrimination.\(^7\) From Australia to Zimbabwe, States Parties have put into place measures to comply with the women’s rights guarantees enshrined in the CEDAW. Although the treaty provisions are consistent with the United States Constitution and laws, the United States’ failure to ratify the CEDAW puts it outside international standards for its anti-discrimination efforts; nor is the U.S. in compliance with the same universal obligations as the 186 international States Parties to the convention. In countries

---

\(^2\) Id. at art. 1.

\(^3\) See id. at arts. 1 & 2 (declaring international bill of rights is the landmark standard to hold governments accountable for gender-based discrimination).

\(^4\) See Harold Hongju Koh, Why America Should Ratify the Women’s Rights Treaty (CEDAW), 34 CASE W. RES. J. INT’L L. 263, 265 (2002) (explaining that the first convention to comprehensively address women’s rights in the political, social, cultural, economic, and private spheres is the CEDAW).

\(^6\) See id. (stating that the United States is one of seven countries, including Iran, Sudan, South Sudan, Somalia, Palau, and Tonga, to not ratify the CEDAW).

\(^7\) CEDAW, supra note 1, at art. 3 (explaining that parties of the CEDAW needs to implement “appropriate measures” toward ending discrimination).
around the world, the CEDAW has been used to change legal norms on violence, citizenship, property, inheritance, and more. Although there is nothing in the treaty that is incompatible with U.S. law and its foreign policy objectives, the treaty would help to strengthen U.S. laws on enhancing gender equality.

Several scholars and foreign policy leaders have made a case for ratification of the CEDAW based on strengthening the platform of American global leadership on women’s equality, and we agree that non-ratification weakens the United States on an international level and solidifies an isolationist stand. In this paper, we argue that ratifying the CEDAW could play a profound role in the United States in combating the subtle and pervasive forms of discrimination faced by women, such as wage disparity and the lack of safe, affordable childcare for working mothers.

It is crucial for the United States to ratify the CEDAW. Ratification would undoubtedly bolster American leadership and moral authority around the world. The Trump administration’s ratification of the CEDAW without reservations is necessary in order to achieve the administration’s stated goals of equal pay for equal work, accessible childcare, family leave, and work/family reconciliation.

Part I of this paper provides a brief overview of the CEDAW’s unfinished history in the United States. Part II goes on to lay out the Trump administration’s goals in regard to the advancement of women in the areas of equal pay for equal work, affordable childcare, and paid parental leave and work/family reconciliation. Using the CEDAW as the touchstone, part II also identifies gaps in the newly proposed plans. Part III examines how ratification of the CEDAW can help advance the Trump administration’s goals. Part IV examines the United States’ contradictory message to women internationally as a manifestation of American exceptionalism. Part V explores case studies that are compatible with the CEDAW in accomplishing the goals of equal pay for equal work, affordable childcare, paid parental leave, and work/family reconciliation through CEDAW reporting and subsequent legislation. Part VI highlights policies in Canada as an important model, given its geopolitical proximity to the United States. The two North American countries represent a study in contrasts. Canada has historically shown fidelity to the CEDAW while the United States has not. Finally, Part VII makes the case as to why the United States must now, more than ever before, ratify the CEDAW.

---

8 See Koh, supra note 4, at 270 (noting that the treaty is not incompatible with U.S. law and its foreign policy objectives).
I. A History of the CEDAW in the United States

The United States, as part of the Working Group of the Whole on the Drafting of the CEDAW during the 34th session of the United Nations General Assembly, was active in contributing to the CEDAW’s creation. Although the United States submitted several suggestions and edits to the CEDAW, it never went so far as to ratify the document. In 1980, President Carter signed the CEDAW, at which point it was presented to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee (SFRC). Both the Reagan and H.W. Bush administrations opposed the CEDAW, and in 1988, 1990, 1994, and 2002, the SFRC held hearings on the CEDAW, yet failed to ratify the treaty. Under the Clinton administration, ratification of the CEDAW seemed imminent: sixty-eight senators signed a letter to then President Clinton in 1993 urging him to take necessary steps to pass the legislation. However, attempts at ratification remained unsuccessful.

There has been consensus across the political divide that women’s rights are national security issues. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice chaired the Security Council presidency on behalf of the United States in June 2008, which is when she introduced what became Security Council Resolution (SCR) 1820. Secretary Rice advanced the notion that sexual violence against women in conflict was indeed an issue that the Security Council was authorized to address. “I am proud that, today, we respond to that lingering question with a resounding ‘yes!’” Secretary Rice added that the world body was acknowledging that sexual violence was in fact a security concern. She stated, “we affirm that sexual violence profoundly affects not only the health and safety of women, but the economic and social stability of their nations . . .” Rice’s sponsorship of Security Council Resolution 1820 was the first time the Security Council recognized, in a resolution, that sexual violence can be a tactic of war.

---

10 The combination of America’s leadership and resistance in the realm of human rights illustrates American exceptionalism, including the practice of negotiating treaties but refusing to ratify them.
12 Condoleezza Rice, Secretary of State, Speech on Sexual Violence as an Instrument of Welfare (June 19, 2008) in U.S. DEP’T ST. ARCHIVE.
13 Id.
14 Id.
15 Id.
A few years later, Secretary Clinton reaffirmed Secretary Rice’s premise and acknowledged, through SCR 1888, introduced in 2009, that the CEDAW is specifically linked to women’s security. Security Council Resolution 1888, introduced by Secretary Clinton, added more accountability measures and articulated that peacekeeping missions have a specific mandate to protect women and children from sexual violence during armed conflict. The resolution further called upon the Secretary-General to: “appoint a special representative to coordinate a range of mechanisms to fight the crime.” Soon thereafter, President Obama released a strong statement in general support of SCR 1888:

Today, the United States joins with the international community in sending a simple and unequivocal message: violence against women and children will not be tolerated and must be stopped. The United States places a high priority on this issue of fundamental human rights and global security. I am pleased that the Security Council, chaired by Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, unanimously approved a US-sponsored resolution that will increase the protection of women and children in conflict. In particular, the resolution focuses on one of the most abhorrent features of modern war: the use of rape as a weapon, and other forms of sexual violence against women and children.

Under the Obama administration, America’s willingness to sign the U.N. Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CPRD), a treaty requiring proactive measures to ensure social, economic, and cultural rights, made ratification of the CEDAW seem like a possibility. In May 2009, the Obama administration prioritized the CEDAW for ratification. Less than a year later, then Secretary of State Clinton told the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women that the administration would “continue to work for the ratification of CEDAW.”

---

17 Id.
18 Id. at 4.

In response to its Universal Periodic Review in 2005 and in 2010, the United States committed to ratify the treaty. Revitalized interest in the CEDAW during the Obama administration not only sparked renewed opposition from conservatives, but from liberals as well. Despite the Obama administration’s demonstrated expression of interest to ratify the treaty, it failed to achieve this goal.

II. The Trump Administration on the Advancement of Women and Gender Equality

A. Equal Pay for Equal Work

In 2009, President Obama signed his first piece of legislation, the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act, into law. The Act, which restored the rights of women and other workers who are discriminated against to challenge unfair pay in court, was a bold step toward achieving equal pay. President Obama’s earliest legislative action set the tone for women’s rights by putting equal pay at the forefront of the nation’s agenda. A year after passing the Lilly Ledbetter Act, President Obama created the National Equal Pay Task Force, and in 2013, signed a Presidential Memorandum directing the Office of Personnel Management to develop a government-wide strategy to address the gender pay gap in the federal workforce. Although the Obama administration acted to close the gender pay gap and put a spotlight on these issues, such inequalities persist and must continue to be addressed.

21 Id.
23 See Julia Schast, Battle of the Sexes: Why the United States Has Not Yet Ratified the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), 3 INTERDISC. J. UNDERGRADUATE RES. 10, 11 (2014) (demonstrating that the Obama administration sparked opposition from both conservatives and liberals upon revitalizing interest in the CEDAW).
At the Republican National Convention in July 2016, Ivanka Trump pledged that she, alongside her father, then Republican Presidential nominee Donald Trump, would fight for equal pay for equal work. The First Daughter took her support a step further on Equal Pay Day, a holiday launched by the National Committee on Pay Equity which took place on April 4, 2017. In honor of the holiday, Ms. Trump tweeted “#EqualPayDay is a reminder that women deserve equal pay for equal work. We must work to close the gender pay gap!”

In the past, however, President Trump has remarked that women will earn the same wages as men if they “do as good a job,” but has also displayed skepticism towards public policy addressing wage discrepancies. Within the first three weeks of his presidency, President Trump signed twenty-five executive orders, none of which addressed equal pay for equal work.

B. Childcare

The current administration has in its chief advocate, Ivanka Trump, an important voice for accessible childcare. Ms. Trump has been instrumental in influencing childcare policies since the presidential campaign, and this has remained one of her signature causes. Sometime in February 2017, Ms. Trump

---

27 Ivanka Trump (@IvankaTrump), TWITTER (Apr. 4, 2017, 7:31 AM), https://twitter.com/IvankaTrump/status/84922875869577217 (illustrating that in honor of the holiday, Equal Pay Day, Ms. Trump tweeted “#EqualPayDay is a reminder that women deserve equal pay for equal work. We must work to close the gender pay gap!”).

29 See id. (describing that President Trump has displayed skepticism as to whether public policy addressing wage discrepancies is realistic).

32 See Ylan Mui, Ivanka Trump Has Found a Cause to Champion – and Democrats Love It, CNBC (Mar. 6, 2017), http://www.cnbc.com/2017/03/06/ivanka-trump-childcare-and-paid-family-leave-democrats-like-it.html (explaining that childcare policies have been one of Ivanka Trump’s primary causes).
met privately with female Republican lawmakers to discuss how to advance legislation on childcare and family leave. Since assuming the presidency, President Trump has addressed support for this campaign promise.

During his joint address to Congress on February 28, President Trump declared: “My administration wants to work with members of both parties to make childcare accessible and affordable . . . .” The United States, which spends less than half of one percent of its federal budget on childcare, stands in stark contrast to other developed nations, which spend anywhere from two to seven percent of its federal budget on childcare. Investment in early childhood education and care would provide the United States with more credibility amongst its global competitors and prepare children for the future.

There are still obstacles to achieving affordable childcare within the Trump administration. Although the issue has the potential to unite Republicans and Democrats, who have historically been more willing than Republicans to champion childcare legislation, there is disagreement over how the new plan should be designed. President Trump’s new tax bill doubled the child tax credit from $1,000 to $2,000 per child under age 17. Taxpayers whose child tax credits exceed their federal income tax liability are able to receive up to $1,400 as a refund. Tax deductions, however, will be of little significance to working class and impoverished families, as they often earn too little in income to owe federal income taxes. The maximum refund a low-income family can receive, though most working families would receive less, is $1,400. A refund of this size would hardly make a dent in the average child-care bill.

---

33 Steinhauer, supra note 31.
35 See generally KATIE HAMM & CARMEL MARTIN, A NEW VISION FOR CHILD CARE IN THE UNITED STATES: A PROPOSED NEW TAX CREDIT TO EXPAND HIGH-QUALITY CHILD CARE (2015).
36 See id. (illustrating that the if the United States invested in early childhood education, it would have more credibility among its global competitors and benefits for the future of its children).
40 The average cost of full-time, center-based care for a four-year-old can range from $3,997 in Mississippi to $12,781 per year in Massachusetts. Parents and the High Cost of Child Democrats must also be involved in the drafting process. Ms. Trump’s meeting with female Republican lawmakers will likely not address considerations of Democrat lawmakers, such as lack of benefits for the working poor. More importantly, action must be taken. President Trump’s remarks to Congress signaled the potential for meaningful change. However, of the twenty-five executive orders that the Trump administration passed in its first month, none address affordable childcare. As recently as mid-June of 2017, Ivanka Trump posted on her Instagram account that she met with Senator Rubio and other members of Congress “to discuss safe, high-quality childcare which is currently unaffordable for many American working families.”

C. Parental Leave and Work/Family Reconciliation

The United States is the only industrialized nation without mandated parental leave. Currently, the best avenue for leave is under the 1993 Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA), which requires employers to provide full-time employees with up to twelve weeks off of work for childbirth or family medical issues. However, leave under the FMLA is unpaid. Also at issue is the length and type of paid leave available for new parents.

See Harrington, supra note 30 (explaining that Democrats must be involved in the drafting process because Ms. Trump’s meeting with female republican lawmakers will likely not address considerations of democrat lawmakers and although President Trump’s remarks to Congress signaled the potential for meaningful change, none of his 25 executive orders in the first month address affordable childcare).

See GRETCHEN LIVINGSTON, AMONG 41 NATIONS, U.S. IS THE OUTLIER WHEN IT COMES TO PAID PARENTAL LEAVE (2016) (explaining that the United States is the only industrialized nation without mandated parental leave).

See Fact Sheet #28: The Family and Medical Leave Act, U.S. DEPT. LABOR, https://www.dol.gov/whd/fmla/ (describing that the best way for people to achieve parental leave is under the 1993 Family and Medical Leave Act, which requires employers to provide full-time employees with up to twelve weeks off of work for childbirth or family medical issues).

Id.

See id. (demonstrating that leave under the FMLA, leave is unpaid and the length and type of paid leave available for new parents remains at issue).

response, Ms. Trump said “we are working with lawmakers on both sides of the aisle to design a paid-leave policy that provides a targeted benefit to help the people who need it the most and are least likely to receive it from their employer, without discouraging larger companies from developing more generous policies.” ⁴⁸ However, she did not elaborate on the plan. ⁴⁹

In December 2017, President Trump signed the GOP-backed tax bill into law. The bill includes a provision that offers a tax credit to businesses that voluntarily offer employees paid leave, which in no way guarantees paid family leave to employees. ⁵⁰ Apart from the tax credit, Ms. Trump has been meeting with lawmakers, such as Senators Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) and Larry Alexander (R-Tenn.) on the issue of paid family leave. Senator Rubio is still in the early stages of drafting a plan which would require employees to draw from their social security benefits in order to take paid family leave. Employees who use their social security benefits in order to, for example, leave to care for a new child or an ill family member, would then have to forgo the social security benefits they already used. Senator Rubio acknowledged that getting unpaid time off, as the law currently stands, is “not a sustainable thing.” However, it is clear from these early discussions of paid family leave that he will not follow the lead of states parties to the CEDAW that offer employees paid leave without future repercussions. ⁵¹

III. HOW THE CEDAW RELATES TO THE TRUMP ADMINISTRATION’S GOALS

A. Equal Pay for Equal Work

CEDAW Article 11 deals directly with employment discrimination. ⁵² While employment discrimination at large contributes to the wage gap, Article 11(1)(d) explicitly references equal wages for men and women, stating:

⁴⁸ Id.
⁴⁹ The Ivanka Entitlement, supra note 47; Ivanka Trump Replies on Paid Family Leave, supra note 47.
⁵² CEDAW, supra note 1, art. 11 (“Parties shall take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women in the field of employment . . . ”).
(1) States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women in the field of employment in order to ensure, on a basis of equality of men and women, the same rights, in particular: . . . (d) The right to equal remuneration, including benefits, and to equal treatment in respect of work of equal value, as well as equality of treatment in the evaluation of the quality of work . . . .

The CEDAW Committee has since considered equal pay for equal work a priority theme for consideration by the Commission on the Status of Women. The Division for the Advancement of Women worked in tandem with the International Labor Organization (ILO), Employment and Development Department, to prepare a study of equal pay. The study suggested policies to reduce the wage gap, including equal opportunity policies. The CEDAW’s General Recommendation No. 13 of 1989 calls for States Parties to ensure the application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value.

B. Affordable Childcare

Alongside the call for equal pay for equal work in Article 11, childcare is referenced in Article 11(2)(c). The CEDAW cites “the establishment and development of a network of child-care facilities” as necessary to eliminate discrimination against women and encourage their continued presence in the workforce. International comparisons have supported the CEDAW’s argument that affordable childcare would mean more women in the workplace. These comparisons suggest that quality childcare in the United States would allow roughly 5.5 million more women to work.

53 Id. at art. 11(1)(d).
55 Id.
56 See id. (“[I]t is suggested that equal employment opportunity policies can seek to reduce occupational segregation by prohibiting discrimination in the various phases of employment.”).
58 CEDAW, supra note 1, at art. 11(2)(c) (stressing the need to provide social services to parents).
60 See id. (specifying the projected number of women that would be able to enter the workforce upon being given appropriate child care options).
C. Paid Parental Leave and Work/Family Reconciliation

The CEDAW addresses the issue of shared parenting throughout the text of the document. CEDAW Article 5(b) highlights the importance of shared parenting roles, which correlate directly to paid family leave for both parents, as well as to work/family reconciliation goals.\textsuperscript{61} States Parties to the CEDAW must “ensure that family education includes a proper understanding of maternity as a social function and the recognition of the common responsibility of men and women in the upbringing and development of their children, it being understood that the interest of the children is the primordial consideration in all cases.”\textsuperscript{62}

Article 11(2)(c) also deals with work/family reconciliation, encouraging States Parties to implement “the necessary supporting social services to enable parents to combine family obligations with work responsibilities and participation in public life.”\textsuperscript{63} This provision is tied inextricably with the above goal of childcare, as the article goes on to cite a proposed network of “child-care facilities” to promote work-life balance.\textsuperscript{64} Paid parental leave is encouraged in Articles 11(1)(e) and 11(2)(b).\textsuperscript{65} Although the text of the CEDAW uses the language “maternity leave,” it is clear that shared parenting is a main goal set out in the treaty, and, thus, should be interpreted as such.\textsuperscript{66}

\textsuperscript{61} CEDAW, supra note 1, at art. 5(b).
\textsuperscript{62} Id.
\textsuperscript{63} Id. at art. 11(2)(c).
\textsuperscript{64} See id. (explaining the importance of the provision, as it would provide for child care and strike a good work-life balance).
\textsuperscript{65} Id. at art. 11.
\textsuperscript{66} See id. at art. 11(2)(c) (encouraging States Parties to implement “necessary supporting social services to enable parents to combine family obligations with work responsibilities and participation in public life” in order to prevent discrimination against women). In its opening remarks, the CEDAW states that it was drafted:

[b]earing in mind the great contribution of women to the welfare of the family and to the development of society, so far not fully recognized, the social significance of maternity and the role of both parents in the family and in the upbringing of children, and aware that the role of women in procreation should not be a basis for discrimination but that the upbringing of children requires a sharing of responsibility between men and women and society as a whole,

Aware that a change in the traditional role of men as well as the role of women in society and in the family is deeded to achieve full equality between men and women . . . .

Id. at Preamble.
The CEDAW Committee brought attention to the importance of paid leave again in 2013 via a General Comment on State obligations regarding the impact of the business sector on children’s rights. The comment identifies the need for governments to “create employment conditions within business enterprises which assist working parents and caregivers in fulfilling their responsibilities to children in their care such as: the introduction of family-friendly workplace policies, including parental leave; [and to] support and facilitate breastfeeding.”

In the period between 2013-2015, several countries have introduced special provisions to privilege parental leave. For example, according to the World Bank Group’s report on Women, Business and the Law 2016, Croatia has increased the length of paid parental leave from 90 to 120 days per person; Latvia has raised the percentage of wages paid by the government during family leave from 68 percent to 80 percent; and the UK introduced 259 days of paid parental leave and 91 days of unpaid parental leave.

IV. THE UNITED STATES’ LEADERSHIP ROLE IN THE WORLD

Harold Koh, in his influential “Why America Should Ratify the Women’s Rights Treaty,” has argued: “America simply cannot be a world leader in guaranteeing progress for women’s human rights, whether in Afghanistan, in the United States, or around the world, unless it is also a party to the global women’s treaty.” He goes on to state that “continuing failure to ratify [the] CEDAW has reduced our global standing, damaged our diplomatic relations, and hindered our ability to lead in the international human rights community.” By not ratifying the CEDAW, the United States is sending a message that this international bill of rights for women, as well as women’s equality worldwide, are not priorities. How, then, can the United States encourage States Parties to the CEDAW to live up to their commitments under the treaty? Non-ratification has called into question the United States’ global standing and ability to lead in the international arena. Regaining this standing is essential to the United States’ role in the world.

69 Women, Business and the Law, supra note 66.

70 Koh, supra note 4, at 264.

71 Id. at 269.
crucial, given the potential impact of the CEDAW, which would not only spark legislation, but would also send a “powerful and unequivocal message” to the international community that women, globally, deserve increased protection. 72

Advocacy for CEDAW ratification from within the U.S. government reflects concerns of the country’s international standing. John Kerry, in his 2013 confirmation hearing statements, stated that gender equality is “critical to our shared goals of prosperity, stability, and peace, and why investing in women and girls worldwide is critical to advancing U.S. foreign policy.” 73 Dr. Sima Samar, Chair of the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission and former Deputy Prime Minister of Afghanistan, echoed Kerry’s concerns, stating “[a]dvancing women’s human rights is fundamental to America’s national security interests and a cornerstone of our foreign policy.” 74 Dr. Samar further contended that “[c]ountries are more peaceful and prosperous when women have full and equal rights and opportunity.” 75 For women to have full and equal rights and opportunity, and, according to Dr. Samar, for there to be resulting international peacefulness and prosperity, the United States must lead by example. 76

A. Manner of Implementation

The CEDAW is an important tool which the United States could use to move toward abolishing gender inequality. In order to do so, the United States must fully embrace the transformative potential of the CEDAW, and thus must ratify the convention with no reservations, understandings, or declarations (RUDs).

The CEDAW cannot accomplish its goals of gender equality if it is pared down by RUDs. 77 The CEDAW Committee, in two General Recommendations

75 Id. (internal citation omitted) (internal quotations omitted).
76 Id. (“Advancing women’s human rights is fundamental to America’s national security interests and a cornerstone of our foreign policy.”).
77 See UNITED NATIONS TREATY COLLECTION, GLOSSARY OF TERMS RELATING TO TREATY ACTIONS, https://treaties.un.org/Pages/Overview.aspx?path=overview/glossary/page1_en.xml (defining that a reservation is “a declaration made by a state by which it purports to exclude or alter the legal effect of certain provisions of that treaty in their application to that state”); defining and its statement on reservations, has urged States Parties to reconsider their “self-imposed” limitations to full compliance.\textsuperscript{78} However, the United States, in its consideration of the CEDAW in 1994, suggested four reservations, five understandings, and two declarations in direct opposition to the new administration’s goals discussed in this paper. The RUDs put forth by the United States are an attempt to ratify the treaty while not compromising its position on gender equality or expanding the protections currently afforded by the U.S. Constitution and legislation. Current protections afforded to women in the United States are insufficient to accomplish the goals of equal pay for equal work, accessible childcare, and paid parental leave and work/family reconciliation.

On the topic of equal pay for equal work, the third reservation states “[the United States] does not accept any obligation under the Convention to enact legislation establishing the doctrine of comparable worth as that term is understood in U.S. practice.”\textsuperscript{79} Further, the fourth reservation, “[the United States] does not accept any obligation under Article 11(2)(b) to introduce maternity leave with pay or with comparable social benefits without loss of former employment, seniority or social allowances,”\textsuperscript{80} conflicts with all three goals identified in this paper.

Reservations, understandings, and declarations accompanying ratification illustrate “American exceptionalism.”\textsuperscript{81} American exceptionalism, a form of exceptionalism, occurs when a country contributes to the drafting of a treaty that an understanding is “an 18 international instrument of a less formal kind,” which “sets out operational arrangements under a framework international agreement” and “is also used for the regulation of technical of detailed matters”; clarifying that while the term declaration has many meanings for the United Nations, in this instance a declaration, and more specifically an interpretive declaration, is “an instrument that in annexed to a treaty with the goal of interpreting or explaining the provisions of the latter”). The four reservations deal with the issues of private conduct, combat assignments, comparable worth, and paid maternity leave. \textit{Id.} The three understandings deal with issues of federal-state implementation, freedom of speech, expression, and association, free health care services, abortion, and the CEDAW Committee. \textit{Id.} The three declarations state that provisions of the Convention are not self-executing, and the United States does not consider itself bound by CEDAW Article 29(1) mandating dispute over interpretation or application of the treaty not settled by treaty be submitted to arbitration by request, and sent to the International Criminal Court of Justice in the event that arbitration is unsuccessful. \textit{Id.}

\textsuperscript{79} Reservations to CEDAW, supra note 77.

\textsuperscript{80} \textit{Id.}

but does not ratify it or agrees to ratification only with exceptions for American citizens or practices.82 These exceptions are embodied in RUDs made to treaties.83 The severity of American exemptionalism depends upon the gaps between CEDAW provisions and U.S. law.84 When it comes to equal pay for equal work, childcare, and paid parental leave and work/family reconciliation, the gaps between U.S. law and guarantees by the CEDAW are significant, and thus, RUDs are a bulwark to gender equality.

V. LEADING BY EXAMPLE: HOW THE CEDAW CAN BE USED TO FULFILL THE TRUMP ADMINISTRATION’S GOALS

A. Reporting

Reporting requirements under the CEDAW provide a benchmark to measure States Parties’ progress.85 The CEDAW Committee then offers constructive feedback to States Parties to the treaty.86 Around the world, the CEDAW Committee’s recommendations have helped to improve and accelerate antidiscrimination and gender equality, as well as eradicate discriminatory norms.87 The CEDAW reporting requirements act like a litmus

---

82 Id.
83 Id.
84 Id.
85 CEDAW, supra note 1, at art. 18. Article 18 of the CEDAW provides the following:

1. States Parties undertake to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, for consideration by the Committee, a report on the legislative, judicial, administrative or other measures which they have adopted to give effect to the provisions of the present Convention and on the progress made in this respect:

   (a) Within one year after the entry into force for the State concerned;

   (b) Thereafter at least every four years and further whenever the Committee so requests.

2. Reports may indicate factors and difficulties affecting the degree of fulfillment of obligations under the present Convention.

test to measure progress and holds governments accountable to fulfill the obligations set forth in the convention.\textsuperscript{88} Without reporting obligations, gaps in lawmaking would remain undiscovered, and countries would not be held accountable for violations to the treaty.\textsuperscript{89} The United States too would benefit from the CEDAW Committee’s recommendations, as well as its enhanced support for the goals set out by the Trump administration discussed herein.

The reporting mechanism is an incremental process. Reports to the CEDAW committee which expose flaws in legislation do not render the measures futile. Instead, the reports highlight certain unimplemented measures. The normative change is clear through legislation; however, practices must change as well. Reports on discriminatory practices hold States Parties accountable and encourage change based on the standards set in the CEDAW.

1. Equal Pay for Equal Work Reporting

The wage gap is a worldwide occurrence, as it exists in every country. Though some countries have wider gaps than others, there is no country in which the gap does not exist.\textsuperscript{90} There is also no country in which women earn more than men.\textsuperscript{91} The CEDAW Committee uses its reporting powers to encourage States Parties to make progress in equal pay for equal work.\textsuperscript{92}

The CEDAW Committee, in its concluding observations in consideration of Iceland’s fifth and sixth periodic reports, acknowledged the progress Iceland made in advancing equal pay for equal work, but expressed concern about general acceptance of the wage gap as a reality.\textsuperscript{93} The Committee called on Iceland “to take proactive and sustained measures to eliminate stereotypical \textsuperscript{88} Rangita de Silva de Alwis, \textit{Opportunities and Challenges for Gender-Based Legal Reform in China}, 5 E. ASIAN L. REV. 197 (2010).

\textsuperscript{89} See Statement of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women on the Post-2015 Development Agenda and the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, CEDAW 57th session 10-28 (Feb. 2014) (providing that the Committee’s efforts have thus already helped to provide a strong framework for bridging the accountability mechanism gap of the MDGs and also for bringing to the fore relevant data from countries on women and development).

attitudes about the roles and responsibilities of women and men, including through awareness-raising and educational campaigns directed at both women and men and at the media” in order to comply with the treaty.\footnote{Id at 3.}

In response to the Committee’s suggestions, Iceland acted to de-normalize the wage gap and promote the CEDAW’s tenet of equal pay for equal work.\footnote{Id.} All universities in Iceland adopted gender equality plans to eradicate gender stereotypes.\footnote{Id.} As a result, Iceland reported, in its responses to the Committee’s issues and questions, that “[I]n all the universities there is a very high level of awareness of the need to achieve equality in gender ratios among students and staff and to abolish gender-based wage differentials.”\footnote{Id.} The program established in Iceland directly addressed the Committee’s concern reflected in its concluding observations.\footnote{Id.} As of 2015, Iceland ranks first on the World Economic Forum’s global gender gap index.\footnote{Magnea Marinósdóttir & Rósa Erlingsdóttir, This is Why Iceland Ranks First for Gender Equality, WORLD ECONOMIC FORUM (Nov. 1, 2017), https://www.weforum.org/agenda/2017/11/why-iceland-ranks-first-gender-equality/.}

Most recently, Iceland introduced legislation that would be the first bill worldwide to require private companies and government agencies to prove, through audits, that their employee compensation is fair.\footnote{Agence France-Press, Iceland to Enshrine Equal Pay for Women and Men in Law, THE GUARDIAN (Apr. 4, 2017), https://www.theguardian.com/world/2017/apr/05/iceland-equal-pay-women-men-law.} Unfair compensation and failure to comply with reporting requirements will result in fines for employers.\footnote{Id.} Although Iceland already had laws in place to promote equal pay, the government will use this legislation as an opportunity to forcefully require cooperation from employers.\footnote{Liz Alderman, Equal Pay for Men and Women? Iceland Wants Employers to Prove It, N.Y. TIMES (Mar. 28, 2017), https://www.nytimes.com/2017/03/28/business/economy/iceland-women-equal-pay.html?_r=0.}

2. Affordable Childcare Reporting

While child poverty and labor market participation are affected by many factors, high quality, affordable early years and after-school services are essential both to the reduction of child poverty and to the labor market participation of parents.

Affordable childcare is a main concern enumerated in the CEDAW and this concern is reflected in its reports to States Parties. \(^{103}\) A salient example are the CEDAW Committee’s concluding observations to Canada during its forty-second session. \(^{104}\) The Committee used its concluding observations to Canada to encourage the establishment of affordable childcare. \(^{105}\) These suggestions were in response to Canada’s Sixth and Seventh reports detailing measures it had taken to comply with the CEDAW. \(^{106}\)

In its combined eighth and ninth session reports, Canada detailed its continued measures to provide affordable childcare. \(^{107}\) These measures included the development of Early Childhood Education and Care policies and programs, allocation of funds in support of childcare, tax incentives for businesses to create childcare facilities for employees, childcare facilities at settlement service provider sites, and more. \(^{108}\)

In 2016, the CEDAW Committee responded to Canada’s eighth and ninth session reports by recommending increased availability of affordable childcare yet again. \(^{109}\) Canada responded to these measures in early 2017 when allocating its federal budget. \(^{110}\) We posit that the Committee’s recurring call for improvements exemplify the treaty’s power and potential to advance women’s rights. \(^{111}\)

---

\(^{103}\) CEDAW, supra note 1, at art. 11(2).

\(^{104}\) Concluding Observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women: Canada, UN COMMITTEE ON THE ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN (CEDAW) (Nov. 7, 2008), http://www.refworld.org/docid/494ba8ce0.html.

\(^{105}\) Id.

\(^{106}\) Id.

\(^{111}\) See de Silva de Alwis, supra note 87; HILARY CHARLESWORTH, HUMAN RIGHTS OF WOMEN: NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL PERSPECTIVES 58-84 (Rebecca J. Cook ed. 1994).
Recently, the Canadian federal government’s 2017 budget pledged $7 billion over ten years on top of an existing $500 million set aside in the 2016 budget for early learning and childcare.112 Moreover, the Canada Child Benefit revamped in the 2016 budget aims to deliver lump sum payments to lower income families.113 This money could well be used for childcare.

In 2013, the CEDAW Committee, in its Concluding Observations to the UK, urged the UK Government to provide more and improved childcare facilities, affordable childcare, and ensure that welfare reforms do not have a negative impact on the cost of childcare for low income families, or the burden of care for women.114 The UK Government’s March 2014 budget to some extent attempts to fulfill the Committee’s recommendations. The Tax-Free Childcare costs cap was increased to £10,000 per year for each child. This means that eligible parents can benefit from greater support, up to £2000 per child each year.115 This scheme was rolled out through 2017 to all eligible families with children under 12 years or disabled children under 17 years.116 All children ages three and four are eligible for 570 hours of free childcare per year, with an approved childcare provider, which is often taken as 15 hours a week for 38 weeks of the year. Working parents may also apply for double the amount of childcare.117

3. Paid Leave and Work/Family Reconciliation Reporting

Partial ratification can erode the impact of the CEDAW. Singapore ratified the CEDAW in 1995 and in doing so, made a reservation against Article 11(1), which, as noted above, is an essential principle for paid parental 117 See id. (providing that parent(s) must be in work, or on leave from work, and make at least the National Minimum Wage or Living Wage for 16 hours of work per week, but not more than £100,000 in taxable income, in order to qualify for the increased childcare).

The CEDAW Committee’s concluding observations in response to Singapore’s fourth periodic report urged the State Party to withdraw its reservation to Article 11(1). The report and concluding observation process was successful, since Singapore, in its fifth periodic report, withdrew said reservation.

The CEDAW Committee expressed concern over the scope of parental leave in Singapore. The state party extended paid parental leave only to citizen births. In response, Singapore extended this right to all mothers. While non-citizen births do not qualify parents for as much leave as citizen births, the initiative signals progress in an area where the United States has remained stagnant.

In 2015, Singapore increased its paid paternity leave from one to two weeks to encourage shared parenting. Work/family reconciliation concerns were addressed in the government’s 2013 Work-Life Grant for employers, which supports the implementation of work-life strategies that would enable employees to manage work and family commitments.

118 Declarations, Reservations and Objections to CEDAW, The United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women, http://www.un.org/womenwatch/daw/cedaw/reservations-country.htm (providing that Singapore interprets article 11, paragraph 1 in the light of the provisions of article 4, paragraph 2 as not precluding prohibitions, restrictions or conditions on the employment of women in certain areas, or on work done by them where this is considered necessary or desirable to protect the health and safety of women or the human fetus, including such prohibitions, restrictions or conditions imposed in consequence of other international obligations of Singapore and considers that legislation in respect of article 11 is unnecessary for the minority of women who do not fall within the ambit of Singapore's employment legislation).

120 Id.

121 See id. (“The Committee expresses its concern that the paid maternity leave of 16 weeks applies only to citizen births, and that single unwed mothers do not get the same benefits as married women.”).

125 Id. at 29.
B. Legislation

The domestic integration of CEDAW through enabling legislation helps to translate the CEDAW into binding domestic legislation. Where the CEDAW is not specifically mentioned in the text of a law, its authority can be inferred when a law calls for affirmative action or temporary special measures, as such are the core values of the CEDAW. Article 2 of the CEDAW highlights the importance of legislation in carrying out the treaty’s goals.\textsuperscript{126} Article 2(a), (b), and (f) explicitly call for legislation to “embody the principle of the equality of men and women,” prohibit “all discrimination against women,” and “to modify or abolish existing laws, regulations, customs and practices which constitute discrimination against women,” respectively.\textsuperscript{127} Legislation is referenced explicitly again in Article 11, which as mentioned above, is directly related to the three goals set out in this paper. Article 11 calls for all legislation passed relating to matters covered within the Article to be “reviewed periodically in the light of scientific and technological knowledge and shall be revised, repealed or extended as necessary.”\textsuperscript{128} Legislation is mentioned several other times throughout the text of the CEDAW, amplifying its importance as a mechanism for establishing gender equality.\textsuperscript{129}

1. Equal Pay for Equal Work Legislation

The significance of equal pay for equal work has been recognized by law since even before the CEDAW was adopted, but the CEDAW has helped to strengthen this equal guarantee. Sweden, which ratified the CEDAW in 1980, passed the Act on Equality between Women and Men (1991).\textsuperscript{130} This act employs measurements, such as requiring employees to prepare a yearly plan of action for equal pay and state the necessary measures to close the wage gap, in order to achieve equal pay for equal work.\textsuperscript{131} The required plan must also create a timeline for when the measures will be implemented, followed by a report evaluating the measures that were taken.\textsuperscript{132} Although the wage gap has not entirely closed in Sweden, there is evidence that where reports are carried \textsuperscript{126} CEDAW, supra note 1, at art. 2.

\textsuperscript{127} Id. at art. 2(a), (b), (f).
\textsuperscript{128} Id. at art. 11(3)
\textsuperscript{129} Id. at arts. 2(f), 3, 6, art. 3, art. 6, art 11(3), art. 16(1)(f), 16(2), 23(a).
\textsuperscript{130} Ratification, Accessions Successions Status, supra note 5.
\textsuperscript{131} The Equal Opportunities Act, Svensk författningsmsamling [SFS] 1991:433 (Swed.).
\textsuperscript{132} Id. at sec. 11.
out, the gap decreases. In 2011, Sweden established a Delegation for Gender Equality in Working Life to investigate the different working lives of men and women, and to reduce the pay gap. In the UK, Section 78 of the Equality Act 2010 requires all companies with more than 250 employees to report their progress on recruitment and employment of women, and on equal pay.

Iceland, a country that is lauded for its progress on equal pay for equal work, received recommendations from the CEDAW Committee criticizing its pay practices. In response to the CEDAW’s concern about equal pay for equal work, Iceland passed its Gender Equality Act in 2008 and made material changes to the Act in 2014. The material changes made in 2014 were tailored specifically to establish an Equal Pay Standard. Additionally, a gender equality checklist accompanies all bills, to highlight whether and how the bill affects gender equality. Other measures include a 7-step action plan to fight gender inequality and mandatory analyses of women’s and men’s wages. In 135 Equality Act 2010, c. 15 (Eng.).

---

137 Gender Equality in Iceland, supra note 135.
139 Id.

a. The appointment of an executive committee on gender wage equality;

b. The establishment of an equality standard and systematic education on its implementation;

c. Technical enhancement of the salary administration system of the State in order to enable significant and regular appraisals of the salaries of men and women in ministries and government institutions;
March 2017, Iceland became the first country to introduce legislation requiring employers to prove they are paying male and female employees equally to more successfully narrow the wage gap.\(^{141}\) In January 2018, Iceland became the first country to make it illegal for companies to pay women less than men. All companies with at least 25 employees must get equal pay certification from the government, or else punishable by fine.\(^{142}\)

2. Affordable Childcare Legislation

In Australia, the government supports women’s participation in the workplace by establishing more affordable childcare.\(^{143}\) In 2015, the Australian Government announced a $4.4 billion Jobs for Families Child Care package.\(^{144}\) The aim is to make childcare—a key barrier to women’s workforce participation—more affordable, accessible, and flexible\(^{145}\) Investment in this sector has the twin purpose of directly benefiting the child but also enabling parents to stay in or re-enter the labor market.\(^{146}\) Affordable childcare is one of the most effective tools in bolstering “returnship” of parents to the workforce.\(^{147}\)

d. Analysis of the success of job evaluations of municipalities for the purpose of reducing the gender pay gap;

e. Initiation of co-operation with the social partners’ organisations on the implementation of the Roadmap of wage equality;

f. The publishing of a pamphlet to guide the interpretation of the provisions of the Act on Equal Status and Equal Rights of Women and Men, on equal pay for equal work;

g. Issuing a checklist for the directors of institutions on criteria regarding the revision of wages so that wage equality objectives can be achieved.

\(^{141}\) Alderman, \textit{supra} note 101.

\(^{145}\) \textit{See} id. at 4 (“The 2015 Budget delivers on the Government’s commitment to support families by making child care simpler, more affordable, accessible and flexible.”).

\(^{146}\) \textit{See} id. (“The Government is delivering policies that encourage people who are not working to enter, or re-enter the workforce, and support people to stay in work, where they choose to do so.”).

\(^{147}\) \textit{See The Child Care Transition: A League Table of Early Childhood Education and Care in Economically Advanced Countries}, UNICEF: \textit{INNOCENTI REPORT CARD} 9 (“For many
The Scandinavian model combines family-friendly work policies such as parental and paternity leave with publicly subsidized early years facilities.\textsuperscript{148} In the Nordic countries there is a smooth transition from the end of paid leave to the beginning of an entitlement to subsidized childcare.\textsuperscript{149} Strong work-life balance policies as articulated in the CEDAW make it easier for families to balance work and care responsibilities and return or remain in the workforce.\textsuperscript{150} Article 5 of the CEDAW calls for the recognition of the “common responsibility of men and women in the upbringing and development of their children.” These policies are interconnected and are anchored in a shared commitment to both women’s and children’s rights and a recognition of the pivotal importance of quality in childcare and education.\textsuperscript{152}

3. Paid Leave and Work /Family Reconciliation Legislation

Germany has passed legislation promoting both paid maternal and paternal leave.\textsuperscript{153} The federal government in Germany holds itself out as attaching great importance to the issue of shared parenting and paid parental leave.\textsuperscript{154} To this end, the government, in 2006, enacted the Parental Allowance and Parental Leave Act.\textsuperscript{155} Besides parental allowance, each parent is entitled to take parental leave which allows both parents the right to interrupt their career until the child’s third birthday to raise their child and then to return to the same job.\textsuperscript{156} To accommodate parents, the rules on parental leave have been made more flexible.\textsuperscript{157} Parents can now claim parental leave for up to two years between the child’s third and eighth year, all without the consent of their employer.\textsuperscript{158}

\textsuperscript{149}See \textit{The Child Care Transition}, supra, note 146, at 4.
\textsuperscript{150}See CEDAW, supra note 1, at art. 5.
\textsuperscript{151}Id.
\textsuperscript{152}Id. at art. 10.
\textsuperscript{153}Consideration of Reports Submitted by States Parties under Article 18 of the Convention: Germany, UN CEDAW (Oct. 21, 2015), http://www.refworld.org/type,STATEPARTIESREP,,56e7c0f54,0.html.
\textsuperscript{155}Consideration of Reports Submitted by States Parties under Article 18 of the Convention: Germany, supra note 152.
\textsuperscript{156}Id.
\textsuperscript{157}Id.
\textsuperscript{158}Id.
VI. LESSONS TO BE LEARNED FROM CANADA

Despite its shared borders and commitment to human rights, the United States and Canada differ when it comes to certain women’s rights. As noted above, Canada has responded positively to the CEDAW Committee’s recommendations on affordable childcare. Beyond childcare, Canada has taken positive steps toward equal pay legislation. The Pay Equity Act, passed in 1987 by the Ontario government, is considered by many as the world’s most progressive equal pay for equal work legislation. The distinction between this act and most other acts requiring equal pay for equal work, is that rather than being complaint-based, employers must actively implement pay equity strategies regardless of whether there is a complaint. Private sector employers with 10 or more employees, and all public sector employers, are tasked with valuing and comparing jobs usually done by women to those usually done by men. Employers must do so in an “objective and consistent way using factors of skill, effort, responsibility and working conditions.” The gender wage gap still exists in Canada, but the Pay Equity Act demonstrates commitment to equal pay for equal work. While the gap has not closed entirely, the act has benefitted many female workers.

Parents in Canada benefit from the country’s parental leave laws. Female employees are guaranteed fifteen weeks of maternity leave, which they can take advantage of as early as twelve weeks before their due date and can

160 Id.
161 Id.
162 Id.
164 Singh & Peng, supra note 158, at 12. The Pay Equity Coalition of Ontario, an independent advocacy group, cited the following examples of the inequities which were identified after the introduction of the Pay Equity Act and the pay equity adjustments which were won: Secondary school secretaries received an annual increase of $7,680 based on their comparison with a male job class of audio-visual technicians; female health technicians were compared to male transportation workers, leading to an increase of $2.79 an hour; female-dominated mental health workers were compared to the male personnel officer’s job, resulting in a pay equity raise of $2.20 per hour; female-dominated police dispatchers were compared to the radio technical supervisors and received an increase of $7,179.00 annually; a female job class of law clerk was compared to the male job class of investigator, resulting in a $4.28 per hour adjustment; at a baked-goods manufacturer, the female job class of personnel manager was compared to the male job class of service manager, resulting in an adjustment of $4.65 per hour. Id.
end as late as seventeen weeks after the actual date of birth. Parental leave makes natural parents and adoptive parents eligible to take up to 37 weeks of leave, and allows mothers to combine both maternity and parental leave, granting new mothers up to 52 weeks of leave. If an employee’s salary is reduced more than 40% during maternal or parental leave, he or she may be eligible for Employment Insurance (EI) benefits. As of December 2017, the maximum yearly insurable earnings amount is $51,700. Parents who enjoy this extended period of leave cannot be penalized, and upon return, must be paid at least as much as he or she was earning before the leave, or more if the wages for the job went up while the employee was on leave, or would have gone up if he or she hadn't been on leave.

VII. AN URGENT CALL FOR REFORM

Support for the CEDAW was planted in the seeds of American history long before it was drafted in 1979. Eleanor Roosevelt was, beyond serving as First Lady from 1933-1945, a delegate to the UN General Assembly, the first Chairperson of the UN Human Rights commission, and instrumental in drafting the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR). Eleanor Roosevelt’s role in drafting and ratifying the UDHR, more than three decades prior to the CEDAW, lays a foundation of support for the treaty. The UDHR, although it states that everyone is entitled to the rights stated therein without impermissible distinction.

167 Eligibility for Canada's EI Maternity and Parental Benefits, GOVERNMENT OF CANADA, https://www.canada.ca/en/services/benefits/ei/ei-maternity-parental/eligibility.html (stating that new parents seeking EI benefits while on maternity or parental leave may be eligible if: (1) they are employed in insurable employment; (2) they meet the specific criteria for receiving the benefits; (3) their normal weekly earnings are reduced by 40 percent; and (4) they have accumulated at least 600 hours of insurable employment during the qualifying period or, if they are a self-employed fisher, has earned enough money during the qualifying period).
168 Employment Insurance Maternity and Parental Benefits, supra note 164.
171 The Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims the entitlement of everyone to equality before the law and to the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms without distinction of any kind and proceeds to include sex among the grounds of such impermissible distinction.
regard to sex, fell short of fully protecting women’s rights.\textsuperscript{172} The CEDAW, with its explicit guarantee of women’s rights, fulfills the promise of the UDHR.\textsuperscript{173} The CEDAW was met with opposition in the United States when it was first presented for ratification, regardless of President Carter’s willingness to sign the treaty.\textsuperscript{174}

A recent uptick in hostile stereotypes toward women, as well as legislative measures restricting women’s reproductive rights, highlight the United States’ obligation, now more than ever, to ratify the CEDAW.\textsuperscript{175} Women currently account for slightly over 45 percent of the U.S. workforce and are instrumental in economic growth.\textsuperscript{176} However, women are not afforded equal economic opportunity or workplace accommodations for parental leave and work/family reconciliation.\textsuperscript{177} Female-owned businesses face difficulty obtaining low cost capital from resources such as the Small Business Administration (SBA).\textsuperscript{178} In response, the SBA created the Women-Owned Small Businesses (WOSB) Federal Contracting Program in 2011, wherein five percent of its prime contracting dollars must be awarded to WOSBs.\textsuperscript{179} However, the five percent goal has not yet been reached in practice.\textsuperscript{180} Additionally, the wage gap has \textsuperscript{172} See Koh, \textit{supra} note 4, at 265 (stating that prior to CEDAW, no convention entirely addressed women’s social, political, economic, and cultural rights).

\textsuperscript{173} See \textit{Universal Declaration of Human Rights}, art. 2.
\textsuperscript{174} For an extended discussion on U.S. opposition to the CEDAW, see Koh, \textit{supra} note 4, at 272-75
\textsuperscript{175} See Laurie McGinley & Amy Goldstein, \textit{Trump Reverses Abortion-Related U.S. Policy, Bans Funding to International Health Groups}, \textit{WASH. POST} (Jan. 23, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/to-your-health/wp/2017/01/23/trump-reverses-abortion-related-policy-to-ban-funding-to-international-health-groups/?utm_term=.115de71a729b (explaining that Trump reinstated a rule that would restrict funding to foreign nonprofits if they provide abortions); \textit{Donald Trump’s Long Record of Degrading Women}, \textit{N.Y. TIMES} (Oct. 8, 2016), https://www.nytimes.com/2016/10/09/us/politics/trump-women-history.html (describing President Trump’s history of insulting, vulgar comments about women over the course of his life that were highlighted during his campaign).
\textsuperscript{179} \textit{Set-Asides for Small Businesses, supra} note 177.
\textsuperscript{180} \textit{Id.}
barely improved, increasing only one percentage point from 2014 (79 percent) to 2015 (80 percent).\footnote{Kevin Miller, The Simple Truth About the Gender Pay Gap, AAUW, http://www.aauw.org/research/the-simple-truth-about-the-gender-pay-gap/} Narrowing of the gap has slowed down since 2001, compared to the rate at which it was narrowing from 1960 to 2001.\footnote{Id.} At this rate, the wage gap is not predicted to close until the year 2119.\footnote{Id.} Women of color and mothers experience an even wider wage gap compared to men in the workforce.\footnote{Id.} In 2015, census data indicated that poverty rates for women increased over the past decade.\footnote{Jasmine Tucker & Caitlin Lowell, Income Security and Education National Snapshot: Poverty Among Women & Families, 2015, NATIONAL WOMEN’S LAW CENTER (Sept. 2016), http://nwlc.org/resources/national-snapshot-poverty-among-women-families-2015/} Not only were women thirty-five percent more likely than men to live in poverty, but more than 16.9 million women were living in poverty.\footnote{Id.}

Up to now, the Trump administration’s record on pay equity and child care policies have been uneven. The Trump administration recently suspended a policy proposed by President Obama that would have made it easier for women and people of color to identify whether they were being paid less than their white male counterparts at work.\footnote{Libby Casey, Ivanka Trump’s Disappearing Act on Equal Pay, THE WASH. POST (Sept. 1, 2017), https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/the-fix/wp/2017/09/01/ivanka-trumps-disappearing-act-on-equal-pay/?utm_term=.218a394b7744.} Under the scheme, private employers with over 100 workers would have been required to disclose pay data to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in addition to the information on gender, race, and ethnicity they already provided to the agency.\footnote{Id.} Although Ivanka Trump has argued that “pay transparency is important,” she disagreed that the policy would have its intended results.\footnote{Id.}

Article 11 of the CEDAW requires governments to take all appropriate measures to ensure equal employment opportunity, training and promotion for women and “… the right to equal remuneration, including benefits, and to equal treatment in respect of work of equal value, as well as equality of treatment in the evaluation of the quality of work . . . .”\footnote{CEDAW, supra note 1, at art. 11.} The CEDAW Committee, following its review of New Zealand’s report to the CEDAW, provided some constructive recommendations:
The Committee expresses serious concern at the continuing wage differential between women and men, which was not expected to narrow under current trends... and at the impact of the repeal of the Pay Equity Act for women's equal pay rights. The Committee recommends that further efforts, including through legislation and innovative policies, be made to reduce the gender wage differential... The Government should also consider developing an “equal pay for work of comparable value” strategy, and reinstate respective legislation.

The CEDAW clearly states that sufficient, affordable child care is an important component of the achievement of women’s full equality. The CEDAW Committee’s Recommendations in 2008, to the Canadian government will be instructive. Section 40 from the CEDAW Committee’s 2008 report states the following:

The Committee urges the State party to step up its efforts to provide a sufficient number of affordable childcare spaces and affordable and adequate housing options, including in aboriginal communities, with priority being given to low-income women, who are particularly disadvantaged in those areas. The Committee also recommends that the State party carry out a cost-benefit analysis to assess the impact of current living standards, housing and childcare situations on the economic empowerment of women and present the findings in its next report to the Committee. Such an analysis should have a special focus on low-income women, taking into account the amount of social assistance they receive from the State compared with the actual cost of living, including housing and childcare.

It will be a huge challenge for the treaty to come before the full Senate for a vote under the current administration. In the past, the treaty has been condemned by Republican leaders as advancing a “radical” abortion and antifamily agenda. Although the U.S. State Department regards the CEDAW

192 CEDAW, supra note 1, at Introduction, art. 11.
193 Id. at arts. 8-9.
194 146 CONG. REC. S3925-02 (Mar. 8, 2000) (Statement of Jesse Helms).
as neutral on abortion, it is likely that a republican Senate would disagree.\textsuperscript{195} The unfounded belief that the CEDAW, which makes no mention of abortion, is an anti-family convention, will keep the treaty from being ratified during a time that the CEDAW can play an important role. The CEDAW Committee has openly expressed concern that women in certain countries might be using abortion as a form of family planning, and encouraged increased family planning education to educate women on alternatives to abortion.\textsuperscript{196}

Articles 12 and 16 of the CEDAW, which are misconstrued as promoting abortion, are necessary to accomplish the goals set out by the administration covered within this paper. Article 12(1) states “States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women in the field of health care in order to ensure, on a basis of equality of men and women, access to health care services, including those related to family planning.”\textsuperscript{197} The elimination of discrimination against women in the field of health care services is necessary for pregnant women to avoid complications. If by chance, pregnancy-related illness or injury prevented women from returning to the workforce, it might further the stereotype that post-natal women are unfit for work. This is made even clearer in the second half of Article 12, which requires States Parties “ensure to women appropriate services in connection with pregnancy, confinement and the post-natal period, granting free services where necessary, as well as adequate nutrition during pregnancy and lactation.”\textsuperscript{198} Article 12(2) speaks directly to the Trump administration’s goal of accessible childcare in requiring “free services where necessary.”\textsuperscript{199}

\textsuperscript{195} See Luisa Blanchfield, \textit{The U.N. Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW): Issues in the U.S. Ratification Debate}, CONG. RESEARCH SERV., Nov. 12, 2010, at 14 (asserting that although CEDAW does not explicitly address abortion, parts of its text—Article 12(1) and 16(1)(e)—can be interpreted in a way which undermines abortion rights).

\textsuperscript{196} See generally UNITED NATIONS, REPORT ON THE COMMITTEE ON THE ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN 58 (1998), http://www.un.org/womenwatch/daw/cedaw/reports/18report.pdf (The CEDAW Committee, at its combined 18th and 19th session reports, expressed “deep concern at the high rate of abortions among Slovak women,” surmising that may be being used as a form of family planning. The CEDAW Committee went on to fervently recommend “an increase in family planning education and accessibility to affordable and safe contraception in order to reduce the number of abortions carried out.”).

\textsuperscript{197} Blanchfield, \textit{supra} note 194, at 14.

\textsuperscript{198} CEDAW, \textit{supra} note 1, at art. 12(2).

\textsuperscript{199} See id. (“Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph I of this article, States Parties shall ensure to women appropriate services in connection with pregnancy, confinement and the post-natal period, granting free services where necessary, as well as adequate nutrition during pregnancy and lactation.”).
A. The Role of the CEDAW in Building Gender-Equal Families

Now more than ever, women need to be empowered both in their family and community, and the anti-family rhetoric surrounding the CEDAW needs to be examined critically. Empowered women are a conduit for strong families.200 Where women are afforded equal rights, they are able to make the best choices for themselves, their families, and their communities.201 Consequences of increased rights for women have longevity and range. Within a year of voting rights being granted to women in the United States, voting patterns began to include a larger interest in local public health spending by about 35 percent.202 Greater public health spending led not only to improved local public health campaigns for issues such as hygiene, but to a decline in infectious childhood diseases, as well as in childhood mortality by approximately 8 to 15 percent.203

Principles of the CEDAW, such as Article 10, prioritize women’s access to education, and such goals can only be accomplished in conjunction with the other articles enumerated in the treaty.204 The full realization of the guarantees under Article 10 is often compromised in certain communities where women do not have the opportunity to attend school.205 In some countries, such as Haiti, even when women are given the opportunity to go to school, they are discouraged due to fear of violence in travel to school or once in school from their male classmates.206 Solutions to such inequities often draw on principles from the CEDAW.207 Reducing distance to school, targeting males to engage in discussion about cultural norms, ensuring gender-sensitive teachings, creating safe environments for and reducing violence against females, and ending early childhood marriage, are all proposed solutions to women’s lack of education.208

200 For an in-depth discussion on the importance of empowered women to families, societies, and the economy, see Rangita de Silva de Alwis, Why Women’s Leadership is the Cause of Our Time, 18 UCLA J. INT’L L. & FOR. AFF. 87 (2013).
201 Women, Business and the Law, supra note 66, at 4.
202 Id. at 5.
203 Id.
204 See Girl’s Education: Overview, WORLD BANK, http://www.worldbank.org/en/topic/girlseducation/overview (explaining that successfully educating girls stems beyond simply getting girls into schools, and requires that girls also feel safe and learn the economic and cultural skills they need to survive).
206 See Girl’s Education: Overview, supra note 203.
207 Id.
Eliminating barriers to education is crucial to achieving a gender-equal family wherein both parents can draw upon their knowledge in raising a family. There is a direct correlation between levels of education between mother and child. Educated women are better positioned than less educated women to provide suitable health care and education for their children. In India, for example, greater access to income and education for women led to improved educational outcomes of children. The CEDAW’s primacy of gender equality is consistent with the principles and goals of the Trump administration’s goals of equal pay for equal work, affordable childcare, paid family leave and work/family reconciliation.

A well-established body of research explores the impact of the CEDAW on lawmakers and how the ratification of the CEDAW alters state party behavior. Harold Koh also states of his tenure at the State Department when he oversaw the development of an annual report on human rights conditions around the world. During his tenure, Koh found that, “a country’s ratification of the CEDAW is one of the surest indicators of the strength of its commitment to internalize the universal norm of gender equality into its domestic laws.”

Beth Simmons explored the impact at the national level of a number of different human rights treaties including the CEDAW. Simmons argues that CEDAW ratification has had an influence on domestic policies by furthering women’s organizations, and this is so in transitional countries. She argues that membership in women’s international NGOs grew in the first and second years after CEDAW ratification. The reporting requirements invite these groups to critique government policies. She argues that the CEDAW has the most impact on countries reputed for their well-developed rule of law institutions.

210 See Girl’s Education: Overview, supra note 203.
211 See World Development Report 2012, supra note 209 (“In India, a woman’s higher earned income increases her children’s years of schooling”).
212 See CEDAW, supra note 1, at arts. 2, 5, 11 and 16 (upholding these values of gender equality).
213 See Koh, supra note 4, at 269.
214 Id.
215 Id.
216 Beth Simmons, Mobilizing for Human Rights: International Law in Domestic Politics (2009).
217 Id.
218 Id.
219 Id.
220 Id.
Even in the anti-discrimination policies in employment (article 11 of the CEDAW) Simmons argues that the CEDAW has an impact on the paid employment in the public sector in which women might reasonably expect to access the courts—the high rule of law states—to enforce their rights.\textsuperscript{221} CEDAW ratification has an important effect on policies and outcomes that the treaty is designed to influence.\textsuperscript{222} The impact is contingent on the role played by national women’s groups and other advocates within and outside the government and the reporting process of the CEDAW which helps to bolster pressure on governments to introduce laws on gender equality in employment.\textsuperscript{223}

Beth Simmons harnesses the power of quantitative analysis and case studies to pierce the skepticism that “international law has done very little to improve the rights of people around the world.”\textsuperscript{224} Instead, Simmons argues that the ratification of international human rights treaties alters state behavior and correlates with respect for human rights.\textsuperscript{225} Simmons outlines a theoretical causal mechanism to explain why human rights treaties alter state behavior, and then provides empirical evidence to support her theory.\textsuperscript{226} Simmons argues that even though international organizations are not able to enforce treaty regimes, a state’s ratification of a human rights treaty provides a powerful tool for internal political discourse ad organizing.\textsuperscript{227} After ratification, domestic actors are able to call upon the treaty body to provide external pressure in order for the government to be accountable to the rights framework.\textsuperscript{228} This external pressure combined with domestic social movements provide a powerful confluence to help shape state action. Harold Koh argues that treaty ratification in democratic states will empower domestic groups whom he defines as “norm entrepreneurs” to put pressure on political leaders to fulfill international legal guarantees and thus show that the CEDAW ratification can alter state party behavior.\textsuperscript{229} Oona Hathaway observes that although formally binding treaties may be ignored with impunity in countries

\begin{footnotesize}
\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{221} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{223} See generally Simmons, \textit{supra} note 215.
\item \textsuperscript{224} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{225} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{226} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{227} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{228} Id.
\item \textsuperscript{229} Oona A. Hathaway, \textit{Do Human Rights Treaties Make a Difference?}, 111 \textsc{Yale L. J.} 1935, 2022 (2002).
\end{itemize}
\end{footnotesize}
which lack a strong civil society, she claims that: “[w]here powerful actors can hold the government to account, international legal commitments are more meaningful.” Given a strong civil society in the US, treaties like the CEDAW will make a meaningful difference.

Oona Hathaway’s findings indicate that ratification of human rights treaties may have a positive impact on states’ human rights records: treaties tend to be complied with once ratified. Professor Martha Davis and Roslyn Powell argue for a right to childcare, claim that human rights treaties could be the foundation for the proposition that working parents are entitled to quality, affordable childcare. Davis and Powell make a cogent argument that domestic courts should recognize the norms embodied in conventions such as the Convention on the Rights of the Child in order to provide a right to childcare in the United States, which in this area, compares unfavorably with other developed countries.

Davis and Powell argue that “. . . regardless of whether or not the United States ultimately ratifies the [Convention on the Rights of the Child], the treaty’s key principles have achieved near-universal acceptance around the globe.” The same could be said of the CEDAW which has ratifications from 188 countries. Women’s rights groups could argue that based on the near universality of the CRC and CEDAW, the United States cannot afford to be a “flying buttress in the cathedral of human rights” and should be shaped by this international consensus on paid family leave. Doing so would recognize the interrelated-ness of women’s mean’s economic participation and children's well-being.

---

231 See generally Hathaway, supra note 228.
233 Id.
235 Louis Henkin, Leader in Field of Human Rights Law, Dies at 92, NY TIMES, https://www.nytimes.com/2010/10/17/us/17henkin.html (“In the cathedral of human rights, the United States is more like a flying buttress than a pillar — choosing to stand outside the international structure supporting the international human rights system, but without being willing to subject its own conduct to the scrutiny of that system.”).
CONCLUSION

Under the Obama administration, women’s equality was regarded as critical to U.S. national security.\footnote{Obama’s National Security Strategy recognized that countries are more peaceful and prosperous when women are accorded full and equal rights an opportunity. When those rights and opportunities are denied, countries lag behind. \textit{Women’s Rights are Human Rights: U.S. Ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women: Hearing Before the S. Judiciary Subcomm. on Human Rights and the L., 111th Cong. 8 (2010).}} Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton also has acknowledged subjugation of women as a threat to the national security of the United States and to the world at large, as such discrimination goes hand in hand with the instability of nations.\footnote{Id.} During a change in administrations and a reshuffling of key White House staff, it is crucial to keep the connection between women’s rights and national security in mind. President Trump has aggressive plans to defeat ISIS, and has summed his plan up as “peace through strength.”\footnote{Matthew Rosenberg, \textit{Fact-Checking Donald Trump’s National Security Speech}, N.Y. Times (Sept. 7, 2016), https://www.nytimes.com/2016/09/08/us/politics/donald-trump-fact-check.html} Additionally, the United States’ promotion of women’s rights could set an example for foreign nations to follow, resulting in less gender-based violence during times of conflict.

The CEDAW has played a significant role in shaping women’s rights, as demonstrated by its principles being upheld in court cases heard by States Parties.\footnote{MARY JANE N. REAL, CEDAW CASEBOOK: AN ANALYSIS OF CASE LAW IN SOUTHEAST ASIA (2016).} The ratification of the CEDAW could help women in the United States to advocate more effectively for equal pay for equal work, affordable childcare, and paid parental leave and work/family reconciliation.\footnote{See de Silva de Alwis & Klugman, \textit{supra} note 221, at 51.} Although the Trump administration has indicated the relevance of these issues, no action has been taken to ratify the CEDAW as part of a more effective advocacy and implementation strategy for those avowed causes. The United States’ continued failure to ratify the CEDAW impoverished the administration’s stated goals. The CEDAW would help establish women as a force in the marketplace by ensuring appropriate compensation, providing adequate and affordable childcare, and evening out the roles of both parents through shared childrearing.\footnote{See \textit{Achieve Gender Equality and Empower All Girls}, SDG, https://sustainabledevelopment.un.org/sdg5 (stating goal 5.4 is to “recognize and value of unpaid care and domestic work through the provision of public services, infrastructure and social protection policies and the promotion of shared responsibility within the household and the family as nationally appropriate”).}

\begin{flushright}
\footnotesize
236 Obama’s National Security Strategy recognized that countries are more peaceful and prosperous when women are accorded full and equal rights an opportunity. When those rights and opportunities are denied, countries lag behind. \textit{Women’s Rights are Human Rights: U.S. Ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women: Hearing Before the S. Judiciary Subcomm. on Human Rights and the L., 111th Cong. 8 (2010).}
\footnotesize
237 Id.
\footnotesize
\footnotesize
239 MARY JANE N. REAL, CEDAW CASEBOOK: AN ANALYSIS OF CASE LAW IN SOUTHEAST ASIA (2016).
\footnotesize
240 See de Silva de Alwis & Klugman, \textit{supra} note 221, at 51.
\footnotesize
241 See \textit{Achieve Gender Equality and Empower All Girls}, SDG, https://sustainabledevelopment.un.org/sdg5 (stating goal 5.4 is to “recognize and value of unpaid care and domestic work through the provision of public services, infrastructure and social protection policies and the promotion of shared responsibility within the household and the family as nationally appropriate”).
\end{flushright}