SYMPOSIUM[†]

INSTEAD OF A PREFACE

LEO KATZ
JAMES LINDGREN

A whole symposium about an exotic crime like blackmail? Why? Only because it has come to seem to us that one cannot think about coercion, contracts, consent, robbery, rape, unconstitutional conditions, nuclear deterrence, assumption of risk, the greater-includes-the-lesser arguments, plea bargains, settlements, sexual harassment, insider trading, bribery, domination, secrecy, privacy, law enforcement, utilitarianism and deontology without being tripped up repeatedly by the paradox of blackmail. How so? And what paradox? Read on

[†] The editors of the University of Pennsylvania Law Review would like to thank Michael S. Moore for serving as moderator of the Blackmail Symposium at which these papers were presented.
